QUESTION PRESENTED

In 1998, the State of Minnesota (the "State") settled a civil lawsuit against the petitioner tobacco manufacturers for reimbursement of health care costs attributed to tobacco. The settlement agreement released petitioners and their distributors from "liabilities of any nature whatsoever," including "statutory" liability, "for reimbursement for [state] health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products." Notwithstanding this release, in 2005, Minnesota enacted a Health Impact Fee on cigarette sales "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use." The Minnesota Supreme Court held that the Health Impact Fee did not impair the settlement agreement, and thus did not violate the Contracts Clause, because the contract did not contain an "unmistakable" promise by the State to refrain from imposing liability through legislation to recoup for the State's health costs related to or caused by tobacco use.

The question presented is:

Whether legislation that impairs a state's proprietary contract violates the Contracts Clause only when the contract contains an unmistakable promise by the state not to alter the terms of the contract through subsequent legislation.

OPINIONS BELOW

The decision of the Minnesota Supreme Court, App., infra, 1a-28a, is reported at 713 N.W.2d 350. The decision of the Minnesota District Court, Second Judicial District, Ramsey County, App., infra, 29a-38a, is not reported in N.W.2d, but is available at 2005 WL 3478647.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Minnesota Supreme Court was entered on June 21, 2006. See App., infra, 40a. This Court previously granted petitioners an extension of time to file a petition for writ of certiorari up to and including November 3, 2006. See Philip Morris USA Inc. v. Minnesota, No. 06A226 (Alito, J., in chambers) (Aug. 25, 2006). The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1257(a).

RELEVANT CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS

The Appendix, App., infra, 41a-44a, reproduces the Contracts Clause of the United States Constitution, U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1, Minn. Stat. § 16A.725, and Minn. Stat. § 256.9658.

INTRODUCTION

The Minnesota Supreme Court's decision presents an important question concerning the extent to which a state must keep its word when it enters into a proprietary contract with a private party. Under the Minnesota court's decision, a state is free to enact legislation that impairs its proprietary contracts unless the contract contains an "unmistakable" promise not to enact that specific legislation. The application of the so-called "unmistakability doctrine" to a state's proprietary contracts, as a practical matter, would eliminate the protections of the Contracts Clause as to most of a state's contracts because few, if any, contracts would satisfy the doctrine's strict requirements. Allowing the Minnesota Supreme Court's decision to stand thus would severely undermine the ability of the government to contract with the private sector and would violate the Contracts Clause's basic constitutional protection against government overreaching.

This Court should grant certiorari because the decision below directly conflicts with more than a century of this Court's Contracts Clause jurisprudence precluding a state from breaching its proprietary contracts through subsequent legislation. See, e.g., U.S. Trust Co. of N.Y. v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1, 25 (1977); Murray v. Charleston, 96 U.S. 432 (1877). In applying the unmistakability doctrine here, the Minnesota court relied on a flawed reading of the plurality opinion in United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839 (1996) -- a case that, properly read, provides no support for the decision below.

This Court should also grant certiorari because the Minnesota Supreme Court's decision deepens confusion among the lower courts in this area of the law. Indeed, lower courts have expressly asked for clarification of the Winstar plurality opinion and, in particular, whether the unmistakability doctrine applies to proprietary contracts. This case presents the Court with an excellent vehicle to resolve this recurring issue and clarify this uncertain area of the law.

STATEMENT

A. Minnesota's 1994 Suit for Reimbursement of Tobacco-Related Health Care Expenditures.

In 1994, the State of Minnesota, together with Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Minnesota, filed a civil lawsuit against the petitioners and other tobacco manufacturers in the District Court for Ramsey County, Minnesota. Minnesota sought "to vindicate the State's proprietary interest in enforcing the State's right to damages for economic injuries to the State which were caused by the unlawful actions of the cigarette industry." App., infra, 50a (emphasis added). As with the private insurer's claims, the "premise" of the State's suit as stated in the complaint was that "the [tobacco] industry – and not the State of Minnesota, or its citizens . . . – should pay for the staggering health costs" incurred by the state and private insurance programs that were attributable to tobacco use. Minn. Supp. App. 110.[1]

[1] Citations to the Supplemental Appendix submitted before the Minnesota Supreme Court appear as "Minn. Supp. App."

B. Minnesota's 1998 Settlement and Release of All Future Claims for Health Care Costs Attributable to Tobacco Use.

In 1998, after extensive pretrial and trial litigation, Minnesota and the petitioner tobacco manufacturers signed a settlement agreement that settled and released the claims in Minnesota's suit, as well as all past claims, and "any future claims for reimbursement for health costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products." App., infra, 108a. The parties agreed that the settlement agreement would "be final and binding upon all Parties" upon approval by the Ramsey County District Court. App., infra, 114a. That court approved the settlement agreement on May 8, 1998. App., infra, 135a.

The settlement agreement obligates the tobacco manufacturers to pay hundreds of millions of dollars in "annual payments" to Minnesota as reimbursement for the State's health care costs attributable to tobacco. App., infra, 104a-105a. Each annual payment is "in satisfaction of all of the State of Minnesota's claims for damages incurred by the State in the year of such payment or earlier years . . . including, without limitation . . . claims for [tobacco-related] health care expenditures." App., infra, 101a. Pursuant to the settlement agreement, the tobacco manufacturers have paid Minnesota a total of approximately $2.25 billion to date and will continue to make payments in the hundreds of million of dollars each year in perpetuity. App., infra, 102a-105a. In addition to the monetary payments, the tobacco manufacturers agreed to significant restrictions on their future conduct. App., infra, 110a-114a.

In return for these monetary and other present and future contractual obligations, the primary tangible benefit Minnesota provided to the tobacco manufacturers under the settlement agreement was a broad, comprehensive "Release and Discharge" of all claims and liabilities imposed by the State – past, present, and future – for reimbursement of its health care costs attributable to tobacco. App., infra, 107a-108a. The Release provides:

> [T]he State of Minnesota shall release and forever discharge all [Settling] Defendants and their . . . distributors . . . from any and all manner of civil claims, demands, actions, suits and causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including civil penalties, as well as costs, expenses and attorneys' fees, known or unknown, suspected or unsuspected, accrued or unaccrued, whether legal, equitable or statutory ("Claims") that the State of Minnesota (including any of its past, present or future administrators, representatives, employees, officers, attorneys, agents, representatives, officials acting in their official capacities, agencies, departments, commissions, and divisions, and whether or not any such person or entity participates in the settlement), whether directly, indirectly, representatively, derivative or in any other capacity, ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall or may have, as follows:
> b. for future conduct, only as to monetary Claims directly or indirectly based on, arising out of or in any way related to, in whole or in part, the use of or exposure to Tobacco Products manufactured in the ordinary course of business, including without limitation any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products.

App., infra, 107a-108a. The State further "covenant[ed] and agree[d] that it shall not hereafter sue or seek to establish civil liability against any person or entity covered by [the Release] based, in whole or in part, upon any of the Released Claims, and the State of Minnesota agree[d] that this covenant and agreement shall be a complete defense to any such civil action or proceeding." App., infra, 108a. The Release specifically names the tobacco manufacturers' distributors as released parties. App., infra, 107a.

C. Minnesota's Enactment of a Health Impact Fee To Recover State Health Care Costs Attributable to Tobacco.

In 2005, Minnesota enacted a "Health Impact Fee," imposing liability on tobacco distributors -- including petitioners' distributors -- for a new 75-cent per pack fee on all tobacco products. The Fee was specifically and expressly enacted "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use," Minn. Stat. § 256.9658(1) -- the same "health care costs" released by the settlement agreement.

When the Governor of Minnesota proposed the Health Impact Fee, he explained that it was "related to the cost of smoking attributable expenses incurred by government health care programs." Minn. Supp. App. 166. The Governor further explained that the 75-cent amount of the fee "was arrived at based on the impact of tobacco use o[n] the state's publicly funded health programs." Minn. Supp. App. 167.

The Health Impact Fee legislation mandates that revenues collected under the Health Impact Fee be credited to a "Health Impact Fund" to be used to pay health care costs incurred by state insurance programs that Minnesota attributes to smoking. Minn. Stat. § 256.9658(9); Minn. Stat. § 16A.725(1). Each year, the Minnesota Commissioner of Human Services must "certify to the commissioner of finance the state share, by fund, of tobacco use attributable costs for the previous fiscal year in Minnesota health care programs." Minn. Stat. § 16A.725(2). The Minnesota Commissioner of Finance must then "transfer from the health impact fund to the general fund an amount sufficient to offset the general fund cost of the certified expenditures." Minn. Stat. § 16A.725(3).

D. The Minnesota District Court Proceedings.

Petitioners filed a Motion for Enforcement of Settlement Agreement in the District Court for Ramsey County, Minnesota, arguing, among other things, that the application of the Health Impact Fee to petitioners' products impaired Minnesota's obligations under the settlement agreement and therefore violated the Contracts Clause of the United States and Minnesota Constitutions. The district court agreed, holding that the Health Impact Fee "seeks to recover those costs from the settling defendants which are prohibited by the settlement agreement," namely the "reimbursement of tobacco-related health care costs." App., infra, 32a.

The district court refused to apply the unmistakability doctrine. App., infra, 36a. It noted that, in certain government contracts, the application of the unmistakability doctrine prevents a government from "waiv[ing] its sovereign powers unless it does so in unmistakable terms." App., infra, 36a. However, the district court held that the doctrine applies only to contracts that involve the surrender of a sovereign power -- not to contracts that, like the settlement agreement in question, were entered into by a state in its proprietary capacity. App., infra, 36a. As the district court explained, the settlement agreement "involves neither the eradication [n]or usurpation of [the State's] sovereign power but its assent to a contract, of the nature and type, which the state enters into every day in a variety of situations." App., infra, 36a.

The district court therefore held that the Health Impact Fee impaired the settlement agreement in violation of the Contracts Clause of the Minnesota Constitution (which Minnesota courts have uniformly interpreted to be coextensive with the federal Contracts Clause):

> The state is bound, like any other party is bound, to the contracts to which it freely and knowingly enters, and from which it benefits. For the state now to argue that it is not bound by its contract undermines and potentially eviscerates the constitutional provision contained in Article I, Section 11 of the Minnesota Constitution which provides that "No . . . law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed."

App., infra, 36a.

E. The Minnesota Supreme Court Proceedings.

The Minnesota Supreme Court granted direct review and reversed. Relying almost exclusively on its interpretation of this Court's decision in United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839 (1996), the court held that the unmistakability doctrine applied and that the agreement did not contain an unmistakable promise that the State would not subsequently enact legislation impairing the contract. The Minnesota court thus rejected petitioners' federal and state Contracts Clause argument. See App., infra, 24a-25a.[2] Even though the

---

[2] Although the Minnesota Supreme Court specifically addressed only the Contracts Clause of the Minnesota Constitution, petitioners raised the Contracts Clause of both the United States and Minnesota Constitutions before both the district court and the Minnesota Supreme Court, see App., infra, 46a, 65a-72a, 92a, and Minnesota courts have uniformly interpreted the two Contracts Clauses to be coextensive. See Christensen v. Minneapolis Mun. Employees Ret. Bd., 331 N.W.2d 740, 750-52 (Minn. 1983); State ex rel. Hatch v. Employers Ins. of Wausau, 644 N.W.2d 820, 833 (Minn. Ct. App. 2002). The Minnesota Supreme Court's holding, therefore, addressed a federal question, and this Court has jurisdiction to settlement agreement was entered into by the State in its proprietary capacity, the court found that the unmistakability doctrine applied. To the court, the dispositive fact was not whether the State entered into the contract in its sovereign or proprietary capacity, but whether the consequences of enforcing the obligation would be to bar the enforcement of legislation. App., infra, 18a-19a. In the court's view, if a state acts through legislation, the unmistakability doctrine applies since the complaining party would be taking the position that the contract barred the state from engaging in a sovereign act. Thus, the court held that, because petitioners were seeking to avoid "the exercise of the state's sovereign power[] to tax," the unmistakability doctrine applied. App., infra, 18a.

Applying the unmistakability doctrine, the Court held that the broadly worded release was "insufficiently specific to meet the requirements of the unmistakability doctrine." App., infra, 21a. Accordingly, the Minnesota Supreme Court concluded that "the Health Impact Fee did not impair [the settlement] agreement and therefore did not violate the Contracts Clause." App., infra, 24a-25a.

review its determination. See, e.g., Delaware v. Prouse, 440 U.S. 648, 652 (1979) (This court has jurisdiction to review a state court's judgment where a state constitutional provision "will automatically be interpreted at least as broadly as [its federal counterpart]."); Enter. Irrigation Dist. v. Farmers' Mut. Canal Co., 243 U.S. 157, 164 (1917) ("[W]here the non-Federal ground is so interwoven with the [federal question] as not to be an independent matter, or is not of sufficient breadth to sustain the judgment without any decision of the other, our jurisdiction is plain."). Because petitioners challenged the Health Impact Fee under both the federal and state Contracts Clauses, the Minnesota Supreme Court necessarily reached both in order to uphold the Health Impact Fee.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. THIS COURT SHOULD GRANT REVIEW BECAUSE THE MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT'S DECISION CONFLICTS WITH NEARLY 130 YEARS OF THIS COURT'S CONTRACTS CLAUSE PRECEDENT.

The Minnesota court's decision, if let stand, would allow any state to impair virtually any proprietary contract as long as the state does so by enacting legislation that is not expressly and specifically barred by the contract. Such a ruling would eliminate any meaningful protection of the Contracts Clause with respect to most state contracts. This Court should grant certiorari to vindicate the basic principle underlying the Contracts Clause -- that "government must keep its word." See L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 470 (1978).

The parties agree that the settlement agreement is a proprietary contract because it settled a lawsuit in which the State and a private insurer -- as third-party payers of medical care -- sought to recoup some of their expenditures. App., infra, 13a.[3] In particular, the purpose of the underlying lawsuit -- in the state's own words -- was "to vindicate the State's proprietary interest in enforcing the State's right to damages for economic injuries to the State which were caused by the unlawful actions of the cigarette industry." App., infra, 50a (emphasis added). The settlement agreement

[3] When bringing and settling such a suit, the government uses its "proprietary or business [power], by means of which [government] acts and contracts for the private advantage of the inhabitants" in a proprietary capacity, and not its "legislative or governmental [power], by virtue of which [government] controls its people as their sovereign." Omaha Water Co. v. City of Omaha, 147 F. 1, 5 (8th Cir. 1906).

released and discharged this proprietary interest in exchange for monetary and other compensation. For this reason, at oral argument before the Minnesota Supreme Court, the State's attorney not only conceded the proprietary nature of the contract but "insist[ed] upon it."

Despite the contract's proprietary nature, the Minnesota Supreme Court applied the "unmistakability doctrine" to uphold the State's impairment of the settlement agreement. The unmistakability doctrine provides that, when interpreting certain government contracts, "sovereign power . . . will remain intact unless surrendered in unmistakable terms." Winstar, 518 U.S. at 872 (plurality) (quoting Bowen v. Pub. Agencies Opposed to Social Sec. Entrapment, 477 U.S. 41, 52 (1986)). The unmistakability doctrine has been held by this Court to apply, however, only when the government entered into a contract in its sovereign capacity and either surrendered its sovereign power to the contracting party or granted the private party a general exemption from the future exercise of sovereign power. Id. at 878-79.[4] It has not been held to apply when the government enters into a business-type contract.

Indeed, for over 130 years this Court has interpreted the Contracts Clause to prevent states from violating their own proprietary contracts through legislation, without applying the unmistakability doctrine. This Court has held that, when the government acts as a private contracting party, "its rights and duties are therein governed generally by the law applicable to the contracts between private individuals." Lynch v. United States, 292 U.S. 571, 579 (1934); see Winstar, 518 U.S. at 887 n.32 (1996) ("[T]he Government is ordinarily treated just like a private party in its contractual dealings."); Wood v. Lovett, 313 U.S. 362, 368-69 (1941) ("[T]he obligation of the State arising out of [a contract] is as much protected by Article I, § 10, as that of an agreement by an individual.").

[4] Thus, the plurality opinion in Winstar explained that the unmistakability doctrine applies when "the Government is subject either to a claim that its contract has surrendered a sovereign power (e.g., to tax or control navigation), or to a claim that cannot be recognized without creating an exemption from the exercise of such a power (e.g., the equivalent of exemption from Social Security obligations)." Id. at 878.

For example, in Murray v. Charleston, 96 U.S. 432 (1877), the City of Charleston, South Carolina, entered into a proprietary contract with private individuals by issuing bonds at a fixed six percent rate of interest. When this rate later became above-market, making the contract no longer beneficial to the City, the City sought to use its sovereign taxing power to recoup its losses by seeking to tax the bondholders on the interest collected in an amount that would reduce the effective rate of interest. This Court explained:

> In substance, [Charleston] say[s] to the creditor: "True, our assumption was to pay to you quarterly a sum of money equal to six per cent per annum on the debt we owe you. Such was our express engagement. But we now lessen our obligation. Instead of paying all the interest to you, we retain a part for ourselves [by operation of a newly enacted tax]."

Id. at 443.

The contract did not specifically bar the City from imposing such a tax. Nonetheless, this Court held that the City's attempt to nullify the contracting party's financial benefit by levying a tax was an unconstitutional impairment of contract barred by the Contracts Clause. Id. at 448. This Court rejected the argument that a state, or its political subdivisions, could use its sovereign powers to alter a contract it entered into in its proprietary, and not sovereign, capacity:

> States and cities, when they borrow money and contract to repay it with interest, are not acting as sovereignties. They come down to the level of ordinary individuals. Their contracts have the same meaning as that of similar contracts between private persons.

Id. at 445. Most importantly, this Court did not apply the unmistakability doctrine to interpret the government's obligations under the bonds, holding that "[a] promise to pay, with a reserved right to deny or change the effect of the promise, is an absurdity." Id.

This Court recognized and reaffirmed the principles of Murray in one of its most recent Contracts Clause cases. In United States Trust Co. of New York v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1 (1977), New Jersey entered into a proprietary contract with bondholders by covenanting, through statute, to maintain the fiscal solvency of Port Authority of New York and New Jersey (the "Port Authority"). In exchange for assuming this financial obligation, New Jersey received the benefit of increasing "the public marketability of Port Authority bonds to finance construction of the World Trade Center and acquisition of the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad." Id. at 18. When New Jersey later repealed that statutory covenant with bondholders, this Court held that, because the contract at issue created a proprietary financial obligation, New Jersey could not use its sovereign powers to abrogate that obligation: "Whatever the propriety of a State's binding itself to a future course of conduct in other contexts, the power to enter into effective financial contracts cannot be questioned." Id. at 24.

Once again, this Court did not apply the unmistakability doctrine. To the contrary, it found that the New Jersey legislation violated the Contracts Clause even though the contract contained no express term barring such legislation. This Court reasoned that, under any other approach, every proprietary contract would be susceptible to impairment because "[a]ny financial obligation could be regarded in theory as a relinquishment of the State's spending power, since money spent to repay debts is not available for other purposes. Similarly, the taxing power may have to be exercised if debts are to be repaid. Notwithstanding these effects, the Court has regularly held that the States are bound by their debt contracts." Id.[5]

Lower courts similarly have recognized that, where a state contracts in its proprietary capacity and not in its sovereign capacity, the unmistakability doctrine does not apply. See Wright v. Dir., FEMA, 913 F.2d 1566, 1570-71 (11th Cir. 1990) (holding that FEMA acted "much like any private insurance company" in administering an insurance program; thus, the insurance contracts were proprietary and "governed generally by the law applicable to contracts between private individuals" (quoting Lynch, 292 U.S. at 579)); Continental-American Bank & Trust Co. v. United States, 161 F.2d 935, 936 (5th Cir. 1947) (holding that, "when the United States becomes a party to commercial paper, it impliedly consents to be bound by the same rules governing private persons under the same circumstances" (quotations and citations omitted)); United States v. First Nat'l Bank, 131 F.2d 985, 987 (10th Cir. 1942) (same).

By contrast, when a party has contended that the government entered into the underlying contract in its sovereign capacity for the purpose of contracting away its sovereign powers, this Court has applied the unmistakability doctrine. For example, in United States v. Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma, 480 U.S. 700 (1987), an Indian tribe argued that the government had, by treaty, covenanted away its sovereign power to control navigable waters. Because this Court found the control of navigable waters to be "an aspect of sovereignty," it denied the claim based on the unmistakability doctrine. Winstar, 518 U.S. at 878 (describing Cherokee Nation, 480 U.S. at 707).

[5] See also Wood, 313 U.S. at 368-69 (the Contracts Clause prohibited Alabama from repealing a statute creating a contractual obligation for Alabama to honor its sale of property for nonpayment of taxes); Louisiana ex rel. Hubert v. City of New Orleans, 215 U.S. 170 (1909) (the Contracts Clause prohibited Louisiana from passing a statute prohibiting the payment of money owed pursuant to contracts entered into by municipalities with the police board pursuant to a delegation of authority from the state).

If the unmistakability doctrine had not been applied below, the Health Impact Fee indisputably would have been found to impair the settlement agreement. The settlement agreement "release[s] and forever discharge[s]" "any and all . . . liabilities of any nature whatsoever . . . whether legal, equitable or statutory ('Claims') that the State of Minnesota . . . ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall, or may have" "including without limitation any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products." App., infra, 107a-108a. In direct contravention of the settlement agreement, the Health Impact Fee imposes liability on petitioners' released distributors "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use." Minn. Stat. § 256.9658(1). The two directly conflict. Thus, the Minnesota Supreme Court made clear that its decision to uphold the legislation was based solely on its application of the unmistakability doctrine to the settlement agreement. App., infra, 21a. Notably, the trial court, which did not apply the unmistakability doctrine, found that the Health Impact Fee impaired the contract.

II. THIS COURT SHOULD GRANT REVIEW TO RESOLVE CONFUSION AMONG THE LOWER COURTS REGARDING THE APPLICATION OF THE UNMISTAKABILITY DOCTRINE AND THIS COURT'S DECISION IN WINSTAR.

This Court should also grant review to clarify and to resolve the uncertainty among the lower courts concerning the meaning of Winstar and the application of the unmistakability doctrine. In Winstar, financial institutions claimed that the federal government breached its statutory covenant to allow them to use special accounting treatment after their acquisitions of failing thrifts. 518 U.S. at 858. The federal government raised the unmistakability doctrine, arguing that an agreement to maintain regulatory treatment would be a promise not to exercise a sovereign power, which must be made in unmistakable terms. Id. at 871. A plurality of this Court found that the unmistakability doctrine did not apply. Id. at 881.

The plurality opinion outlined a two-step inquiry for determining whether the unmistakability doctrine applies to a government contract. Id. at 880. The first step requires the court to determine whether the contract is "proprietary" or "sovereign" in nature. If the contract is proprietary, the unmistakability does not apply. Thus, the plurality stated that, when the government acts as a private party, or "contracts, say, to buy food for the army . . . no sovereign power is limited by the Government's promise to purchase and a claim for damages implies no such limitation. That is why no one would seriously contend that enforcement of humdrum supply contracts might be subject to the unmistakability doctrine." Id. Only if a state enters into the contract in its sovereign capacity should the court reach the second step -- determining whether the relief sought "would block [the] exercise of a sovereign power of the Government." Id. at 879 (emphasis removed).

The Minnesota Supreme Court ignored the first step of the plurality's analysis. Although the court acknowledged that "the unmistakability doctrine . . . never applies" to "humdrum supply" contracts, App., infra, 17a, the court nevertheless held that the doctrine applies to proprietary contracts if the act allegedly constituting a breach was a sovereign act. App., infra, 19a. The Minnesota court therefore jumped over the threshold issue of determining whether the State entered into a proprietary or sovereign contract and proceeded directly to the second issue. According to the Minnesota court, the doctrine applies even to proprietary contracts whenever the relief sought would "block [the] exercise of a sovereign power of the state." App., infra, 19a (emphasis removed).

If this interpretation of the unmistakability doctrine were accepted, it would eviscerate the protections of the Contracts Clause. The only relief afforded by the Contracts Clause is a declaration that the challenged legislation is a nullity. See Winstar, 518 U.S. at 887 n.32. Accordingly, the practical consequence of the Minnesota court's "leap frog" analysis is that a state may impair any proprietary contract at its whim -- provided it does so through legislation. This interpretation of Winstar directly conflicts with Murray and this Court's other Contracts Clause jurisprudence, including United States Trust, and writes the Contracts Clause out of existence.[6]

[6] Even Justice Scalia's concurrence in Winstar, joined by Justices Kennedy and Thomas, is consistent with Murray and United States Trust and inconsistent with the decision below. While that concurrence would apply the unmistakability doctrine to a state's proprietary contracts, it would interpret the doctrine to have "little if any independent legal force beyond what would be dictated by normal principles of contract interpretation." Id. at 920 (Scalia, J., concurring in judgment) (emphasis added). Under Justice Scalia's analysis, a state does not, simply by virtue of its status as sovereign, reserve the right to alter a contract absent an

Nor is the Minnesota court's misinterpretation of Winstar an aberration. At least two United States Circuit Courts of Appeals (the Third and Federal Circuits) likewise have read Winstar to mean that the unmistakability doctrine applies to all governmental contracts, even proprietary contracts, as long as the relief sought would block the exercise of a sovereign power. See Tamarind Resort Assocs. v. Gov't of the Virgin Islands, 138 F.3d 107, 109, 112 (3d Cir. 1998) (applying of the unmistakability doctrine even though the contract was "proprietary in nature"); Yankee Atomic Elec. Co. v. United States, 112 F.3d 1569, 1579 (Fed. Cir. 1997) (applying the unmistakability doctrine to uranium purchase contracts even while recognizing that "the contracts at issue . . . [we]re fixed-price contracts," and that normally "where one agrees to do, for a fixed sum, a thing possible to be performed, he will not . . . become entitled to additional compensation, because unforeseen difficulties are encountered" (internal quotation and citation omitted)). It is therefore imperative that this Court clarify that Winstar was not intended to eviscerate the Contracts Clause. See Allied Structural Steel Co. v. Spannaus, 438 U.S. 234, 241 (1978) (noting that the Contracts Clause was "perhaps the strongest single constitutional check on state legislation during our early years as a Nation," and noting the importance of courts recognizing that it "remains part of the Constitution" and "is not a dead letter").

The decision below also deepens the confusion and uncertainties among the lower courts regarding the proper interpretation of Winstar. This confusion is real and well-unmistakable promise to the contrary. The Minnesota Supreme Court's holding that the doctrine applied to all government contracts and required a second promise not to breach a proprietary contract was advocated only by the two Winstar dissenters. See id. at 924-26 (Rehnquist, C.J., dissenting, joined in part by Ginsburg, J.).

recognized by the lower courts themselves. See, e.g., Tamarind Resort Assocs., 138 F.3d at 112 ("It is somewhat unclear after the Winstar plurality opinion as to the type of contract to which the unmistakability doctrine applies."); Rio Grande Silvery Minnow v. Keys, 333 F.3d 1109, 1139-40 (10th Cir. 2003) (Seymour, J., concurring) ("Given the various opinions in Winstar, none of which commanded a majority, it is clear that not all contracts to which the government is a party are subject to the unmistakable terms doctrine," but "the fractured Winstar decision leaves us with some uncertainty regarding the extent and applicability of the unmistakable terms doctrine in specific situations.") (internal quotations omitted), opinion vacated by 355 F.3d 1215 (10th Cir. 2004).[7]

Academic commentators have likewise noted the confusion surrounding Winstar. See, e.g., Joshua I. Schwartz, The Status of the Sovereign Acts and Unmistakability Doctrines in the Wake of Winstar: An Interim Report, 51 Ala. L. Rev. 1177, 1183 (2000) (reviewing post-Winstar cases and Cal. 2001) ("Although seven Justices formed the majority to support the Winstar unmistakability judgment (i.e. that it did not shield the government from liability), there was not a majority opinion, and the four separate opinions are thoroughly fragmented, not articulating any unified analysis in support of the judgment based on either the unmistakability or sovereign acts doctrines. . . . As a result of these shifting positions, it appears particularly problematic to predict which unmistakability standard applies to any specific contract."); Gen. Dynamics Corp. v. United States, 47 Fed. Cl. 514, 540 n.9 (2000) (noting that commentators have described Winstar as a "delphic puzzle"); Adams v. United States, 42 Fed. Cl. 463, 482-83 (1998) ("[T]he applicability of the unmistakability doctrine to particular cases after Winstar is unclear. . . . [T]his court, and, undoubtedly, many others would welcome further clarification."); Pitney Bowes, Inc. v. United States Postal Serv., 27 F. Supp. 2d 15, 23 (D.D.C. 1998) ("Courts have struggled with the meaning of Winstar.").

noting that the lowers courts have struggled to "make a sensible and coherent whole out of the unruly strands of law left" after Winstar); Alan R. Burch, Purchasing the Right to Govern: Winstar and the Need to Reconceptualize the Law of Regulatory Agreements, 88 Ky. L.J. 245, 251 (2000) (commenting that "Winstar throws nearby areas of the law into confusion"); Michael W. Graf, The Determination of Property Rights in Public Contracts After Winstar v. United States: Where Has the Supreme Court Left Us?, 38 Nat. Resources J. 197, 225 (1998) (Because the "Court's main opinion does not discuss how the unmistakability doctrine should be applied in resolving government contract disputes," there is "confusion regarding the proper role of the doctrine.").

The stakes at issue here are high; application of the unmistakability doctrine to proprietary contracts "would place the doctrine at odds with the Government's own long-run interest as a reliable contracting partner." Winstar, 518 U.S. at 883:

> From a practical standpoint, it would make an inroad on this power, by expanding the Government's opportunities for contractual abrogation, with the certain result of undermining the Government's credibility at the bargaining table and increasing the cost of its engagements. As Justice Brandeis recognized, "[p]unctilious fulfillment of contractual obligations is essential to the maintenance of the credit of public as well as private debtors." Lynch, 292 U.S. at 580.

Id. at 884-85. As Justice Breyer observed in his concurrence in Winstar, for over 100 years, "in practical terms [the Court's jurisprudence] [has] ensure[d] that the government is able to obtain needed goods and services from parties who might otherwise, quite rightly, be unwilling to undertake the risk of government contracting." Id. at 913 (Breyer, J., concurring)

(citing Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 184 U.S. 368, 384 (1902); Murray, 96 U.S. at 445; New Jersey v. Yard, 95 U.S. 104, 116-117 (1877)). The Minnesota decision conflicts with this policy and, if allowed to stand, would cause those who would enter into contracts with the government to no longer have the assurance that the states would be bound by those contracts.[8]

In sum, this case presents an excellent vehicle to clarify Winstar and, in particular, the application of the unmistakability doctrine to proprietary contracts. For all these reasons, this Court should grant the petition.

SYLLABUS

The imposition of the Health Impact Fee under Minn. Stat. § 256.9658 (Supp. 2005) does not violate the 1998 settlement agreement between respondent tobacco companies and the state because the terms of the settlement agreement do not unmistakably relinquish the state legislature's sovereign authority to impose such an exaction on tobacco products in order to recover health care costs related to the use of tobacco products and to discourage smoking.

Heard, considered, and decided by the court en banc.

O P I N I O N

ANDERSON, Russell A., Chief Justice.

We are asked to determine whether the appellant State of Minnesota can impose a 75-cent Health Impact Fee on the cigarettes of manufacturers that are parties to the 1998 settlement of the state's tobacco suit, State by Humphrey v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., No. C1-94-8565 (Ramsey Cty. Dist Ct.). Respondents Philip Morris USA, Inc., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, and Lorillard Tobacco Company, Inc., challenge the imposition of the fee on their products. The Ramsey County District Court concluded that the Health Impact Fee violates the settlement agreement and is unconstitutional. The district court also concluded that if the Health Impact Fee cannot be imposed on respondents' products, continued imposition of the Health Impact Fee on the products of the intervenors, a cigarette manufacturer and an industry trade association of cigarette manufacturers that are not parties to the settlement agreement, would constitute selective enforcement and violate those intervenors' right to equal protection. We granted accelerated review and now reverse the district court. We conclude that the imposition of the Health Impact Fee does not violate the settlement agreement because the terms of the settlement agreement do not unmistakably relinquish the state legislature's sovereign authority to impose such an exaction on tobacco products in order to recover health care costs related to the use of tobacco products and to discourage smoking.

In 1994, the state and co-plaintiff Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Minnesota sued certain major cigarette manufacturers and trade organizations, asserting claims for monetary, equitable, and injunctive relief. The state settled with one of the defendant manufacturers, Liggett Group, Inc., in 1997, and in May 1998 settled with the remaining defendants (settlement agreement). The terms of the settlement agreement required the manufacturers to make six payments to the state of specified amounts through January 2003, as well as additional annual payments to the state beginning on December 31, 1998, and continuing in perpetuity. The settlement agreement provided that each of the payments to the state were in satisfaction of the state's claim for damages incurred in the year of such payment or earlier years "relat[ing] to the subject matter of this action." The settlement agreement also included mutual releases and a covenant not to sue by the state. In addition, the terms of the settlement required the settling manufacturers to restrict their advertising, lobbying, and litigation activities. The Ramsey County District Court retained jurisdiction to enforce the settlement agreement.

In July 2005, the legislature enacted legislation imposing a "Health Impact Fee" of 75 cents on each pack of cigarettes sold in Minnesota after July 31, 2005. Act of July 14, 2005, ch. 4, art. 4, § 2, 2005 Minn. Laws 1st Spec. Sess. 2454, 2541-42 (codified at Minn. Stat. § 256.9658 (Supp. 2005)). The legislature expressly stated that the purposes of the Health Impact Fee were "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use and to reduce tobacco use, particularly by youths." Minn. Stat. § 256.9658, subd. 1. The Health Impact Fee "is imposed on and collected from" cigarette distributors. Id. Cigarette distributors pay the fee "at the same time and in the same manner" as they pay cigarette taxes under Minn. Stat. ch. 297F (2004 & Supp. 2005), that is, by purchase of a tax stamp that must be affixed to each pack of cigarettes. Minn. Stat. § 256.9658, subds. 4, 7. In the same legislation, the legislature amended the Unfair Cigarette Sales Act to specifically include "fees," such as the Health Impact Fee, in the definition of the "basic cost of cigarettes." Act of July 14, 2005, ch. 4, art. 4, § 4, 2005 Minn. Laws 1st Spec. Sess. at 2543 (codified as amended at Minn. Stat. § 325D.32, subd. 9 (Supp. 2005)); see Minn. Stat. § 325D.31 (2004).

Finally, the legislation also created a Health Impact Fund in the state treasury, to which revenue from the Health Impact Fee is credited. Act of July 14, 2005, ch. 4, art. 4, § 1, 2005 Minn. Laws 1st Spec. Sess. at 2541 (codified at Minn. Stat. § 16A.725 (Supp. 2005)). The Commissioner of Human Services is required to certify annually the health care costs incurred by the state for the previous fiscal year attributable to tobacco use, and the Commissioner of Finance must transfer funds from the Health Impact Fund to the general fund to offset those certified health care expenditures. Minn. Stat. § 16A.725, subds. 2, 3(a).

In August 2005, Philip Morris USA, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, and Lorillard Tobacco Company (collectively the "settling manufacturers") and their distributors[1] filed motions in Ramsey County District Court under the caption of the 1994 tobacco case seeking to enforce the terms of the settlement agreement and to prevent the imposition of the Health Impact Fee on their products. The respondents alleged that the state's release in the settlement agreement "serves as a complete bar and defense to any attempt by the State to collect the [Health Impact Fee] with respect" to their products. Commonwealth Brands, Inc., a cigarette manufacturer that was not a party to the state's tobacco litigation, intervened, as did the Council of Independent Tobacco Manufacturers of America, whose cigarette manufacturer members also were not parties to the state's tobacco litigation. The intervenors alleged that, if the court ruled the Health Impact Fee could not be imposed on the products of the settling manufacturers, it could not be imposed on the intervenors' products[2] without violating the intervenors' rights under the First Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause of the U.S. Constitution, as well as the Uniformity Clause of the state constitution. Governor Tim Pawlenty, by his counsel, participated as an amicus curiae.

[1] The following distributors of the settling manufacturers' products are also respondents in this appeal: A.H. Hermel Candy & Tobacco Co.; Henry's Foods, Inc.; Sandstrom's Inc.; Johnson Candy and Tobacco Co. of Brainerd, Inc.; M. Amundson Cigar & Candy Company LLP; The Watson Companies, Inc.; Granite City Jobbing Company, Inc.; Minter-Weisman Co.; Segal Wholesale, Inc.; and Tyler Wholesale, Inc.

Unless otherwise qualified, references in this opinion to respondents mean the settling manufacturers and these distributors.

By order dated December 20, 2005, the Ramsey County District Court granted the respondents' motion to enforce the settlement agreement, ordering that "the Health Impact Fee violates the Settlement Agreement and is unconstitutional." The court noted that the "essential benefits" of the settlement agreement to respondents were that it "reduced to liquidated form, those damages which the state sought to collect by its lawsuit." The court also noted that by enacting the Health Impact Fee the legislature sought "to recover those costs from the settling defendants which are prohibited by the settlement agreement." The court stated that by seeking reimbursement of tobacco-related health care costs the state had violated the settlement agreement.

[2] Although intervenor Council of Independent Tobacco Manufacturers of America manufactures no products, its members do. For ease of reference, we will refer to the products of those member manufacturers and of intervenor Commonwealth Brands as intervenors' products.

The district court also granted the intervenors' motion to bar the imposition of the Health Impact Fee on their products, ordering that "the Health Impact Fee cannot be enforced against [the intervenors] because it constitutes a selective enforcement and deprives them of equal protection under the law." Having barred the imposition of the Health Impact Fee on the products of the settling manufacturers, the court noted that imposing the Health Impact Fee on other cigarettes would give the settling manufacturers' products "a distinct marketplace advantage in price" that would only encourage underage smokers to switch to those products, rather than to quit altogether. As a result, the district court stated, the purposes of the legislation—to recover tobacco-related health care costs and discourage smoking—would not be met if the Health Impact Fee were imposed on only some cigarettes.

Finally, the district court ordered that "[t]he defendants and the intervenors are [entitled] to credit or refunds, to the extent paid." The court stayed its order pending appeal, and the state continues to collect the Health Impact Fee. However, the state must keep any funds collected in the Health Impact Fund until all appeals are exhausted and the district court has determined how those funds will be disbursed.

By order dated January 19, 2006, we granted the state's petition for accelerated review and set an expedited schedule for briefing and oral argument.

I.

Because the facts are undisputed, the only issues before us on appeal from the district court's order enforcing the settlement agreement are questions of contractual, statutory, and constitutional interpretation. These are legal issues subject to de novo review. See, e.g., Employers Mut.

Cas. Co. v. A.C.C.T., Inc., 580 N.W.2d 490, 493 (Minn. 1998) (contract interpretation); Vlahos v. R & I Constr. of Bloomington, Inc., 676 N.W.2d 672, 679 (Minn. 2004) (statutory interpretation); State v. Brooks, 604 N.W.2d 345, 348 (Minn. 2000) (constitutional interpretation).

We consider the settlement agreement as a contract. Ryan v. Ryan, 193 N.W.2d 295, 297 (Minn. 1971). Unambiguous language in the settlement agreement is to be given its plain and ordinary meaning. See Minneapolis Pub. Hous. Auth. v. Lor, 591 N.W.2d 700, 704 (Minn. 1999). In construing ambiguous contract language, we consider the contract as a whole in light of the circumstances surrounding its formation, and strive to arrive at the parties' real understanding. See Donnay v. Boulware, 275 Minn. 37, 43, 144 N.W.2d 711, 715 (1966).

Respondents and intervenors also urge us to declare the Health Impact Fee unconstitutional. We will uphold a statute unless the challenging party demonstrates that it is unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt, and every presumption is invoked in favor of the constitutionality of a statute. E.g., Hutchinson Tech., Inc. v. Comm'r of Revenue, 698 N.W.2d 1, 14 (Minn. 2005). Moreover, we do not reach constitutional issues if the matter can be resolved otherwise. In re Senty-Haugen, 583 N.W.2d 266, 269 n.3 (Minn. 1998) (citing Ashwander v. Tenn. Valley Auth., 297 U.S. 288, 346-48 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring)). Accordingly, we first evaluate the parties' arguments as to the construction of the settlement agreement.

II.

There is no dispute that in the settlement agreement the state agreed to release respondents from a range of potential future claims in return for the required settlement payments and restrictions on future conduct. We must decide whether any obligations created by the Health Impact Fee legislation are within the scope of those released. To do this, we first examine the nature of the obligations the Health Impact Fee legislation imposed on respondents. Second, we look to the settlement agreement to determine, as a matter of contract interpretation, whether Health Impact Fee obligations are among those the state released.

A.

We first consider what obligations, if any, the enactment of the Health Impact Fee imposed on respondents. As we have noted, Minn. Stat. § 256.9658 imposes a Health Impact Fee of 75 cents on each pack of cigarettes sold in Minnesota after July 31, 2005. See Act of July 14, 2005, ch. 4, art. 4, § 2, 2005 Minn. Laws 1st Spec. Sess. at 2541-42. Minnesota Statutes § 256.9658, subd. 4, requires that cigarette distributors pay the Health Impact Fee to the state "at the same time and in the same manner as provided for payment of tax under chapter 297F." Minnesota Statutes §§ 297F.08-.09 (2004 & Supp. 2005), in turn, require that cigarette distributors remit cigarette taxes and fees to the state by purchasing tax stamps, which are then affixed to each pack of cigarettes sold in the state.

The Minnesota Unfair Cigarette Sales Act, Minn. Stat. §§ 325D.30-.42 (2004 & Supp. 2005), establishes a minimum price (called the "basic cost") for cigarettes. As amended by the Health Impact Fee legislation, that minimum price includes all taxes and fees imposed by the state, including the Health Impact Fee. See Minn. Stat. § 325D.32, subd. 9 (Supp. 2005). Further, the Unfair Cigarette Sales Act requires both distributors and retailers to charge at least the "basic cost" (plus a statutorily-presumed cost of doing business markup) for the cigarettes they sell. Minn. Stat. § 325D.33, subd. 1 (2004) (prohibiting wholesalers and retailers from selling cigarettes at less than their respective costs); Minn. Stat. § 325D.32, subds. 10, 11 (2004) (defining "cost to wholesaler" and "cost of the retailer" to mean the "basic cost" of cigarettes plus their respective "cost of doing business"). Thus, distributors are required by law to pass the Health Impact Fee through to cigarette retailers, and retailers are required to pass the Health Impact Fee through to retail cigarette purchasers. As a result, Minnesota law requires that retail cigarette purchasers, not cigarette manufacturers or distributors, bear the economic burden of the Health Impact Fee.

In enacting the Health Impact Fee and thereby increasing the cost of a tax stamp, the legislature did create an obligation on the part of cigarette distributors, to remit the fee to the state through their purchase of tax stamps. Therefore, the district court correctly stated that the Health Impact Fee is "collected from the distributors of tobacco products." But the distributors ultimately bear no economic burden from the imposition of the Health Impact Fee because it must be passed on to retail purchasers, including a markup for the distributors' cost of doing business. On the other hand, the legislation imposed no liabilities, obligations, or claims on cigarette manufacturers for the Health Impact Fee. The only impact of passage of the Health Impact Fee on the manufacturers is that others, ultimately consumers, are required to pay the fee when the manufacturers' products are sold.

Thus, while one of the express purposes of the Health Impact Fee legislation was to recover tobacco-related health care costs for the state, those costs are not recovered from respondents. The law requires retail cigarette consumers to bear the cost of the Health Impact Fee, and it is therefore those consumers who in fact reimburse the state for health care costs associated with tobacco use.

B.

We next address whether the obligations imposed by the enactment of the Health Impact Fee are within the scope of the release agreed to by the state in the settlement agreement. In doing so, it is helpful to consider a more complete presentation of the language of the state's release, rather than partial excerpts:

> State of Minnesota's Release and Discharge. Upon Final Approval, the State of Minnesota shall release and forever discharge all Defendants [and specified related entities, including distributors] from any and all manner of civil claims, demands, actions, suits and causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including civil penalties, as well as costs, expenses and attorneys' fees, known or unknown, suspected or unsuspected, accrued or unaccrued, whether legal, equitable or statutory ("Claims") that the State of Minnesota [and its related entities] whether directly, indirectly, representatively, derivatively or in any other capacity, ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall or may have, as follows:
> a. for past conduct, as to any Claims relating to the subject matter of this action which have been asserted or could be asserted now or in the future in this action or a comparable Federal action by the State; and
> b. for future conduct, only as to monetary Claims directly or indirectly based on, arising out of or in any way related to, in whole or in part, the use of or exposure to Tobacco Products manufactured in the ordinary course of business, including without limitation any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products.

Despite the fact that respondents are not obligated to pay the Health Impact Fee themselves, they argue that the imposition of the fee violates the settlement agreement. In doing so, respondents do not acknowledge the specific and limited obligations placed upon them by the Health Impact

Fee legislation, but focus on the legislation's purpose, to recover tobacco-related health care costs, regardless of who pays. Therefore, we begin our analysis with the nature of the claims, as respondents construe them, that respondents contend the state released and that respondents contend are improperly revived by the Health Impact Fee legislation.

Respondents argue that the terms of the settlement agreement create "a broad, comprehensive 'Release and Discharge' of all claims by the State—past, present, and future—for reimbursement of health care costs attributable to tobacco." Respondents assert that this broad release of all claims for recovery of health care costs was the "only tangible benefit" they received under the settlement agreement. Although respondents do not articulate the boundaries of this release with specificity, there appear to be two important characteristics of the release as construed by respondents.

First, as noted above, in respondents' view the state's broad release of claims for reimbursement of health care costs is not limited to reimbursement by respondents. For if the release is limited to reimbursement by respondents for health care costs, the Health Impact Fee would not fall within the release at all, because the manufacturers are not required to pay any part of the fee and their distributors are reimbursed for their initial payment of the fee through retail sales.

Second, respondents contend that the release of claims for reimbursement of health care costs extends beyond claims that may be brought in litigation to actions by the legislature to recover those costs. Respondents state that a general excise tax on tobacco products would not be subject to the release, even if its proceeds were used to pay for tobacco-related health care costs. But they argue that a legislative revenue measure that is expressly intended to recover health care costs would fall within the scope of the released claims. The distinction, apparently, is the legislation's express focus on recovery of health care costs.

In positing this release of all claims for reimbursement of health care costs, respondents rely on both the broad language of the release that relieves them of "liabilities of any nature whatsoever, * * * whether legal, equitable or statutory," and on the specific reference in subparagraph b of the release to "any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products." They also point to the provision earlier in the settlement agreement that each annual payment is "in satisfaction of all of the State of Minnesota's claims for damages incurred by the State in the year of such payment or earlier years * * * including, without limitation * * * claims for [tobacco-related] health care expenditures." Moreover, because the release includes "statutory" claims, respondents assert, it necessarily includes revenue measures enacted by the legislature.

Thus, again, respondents' contention is that in the settlement agreement the state released all claims for future recovery of tobacco-related health care costs, including revenue measures enacted by the legislature if they are expressly intended to recover those costs. Because the Health Impact Fee is expressly aimed at recovering tobacco-related health care costs, respondents conclude, it cannot be enforced against them, or, apparently, their products.

The district court similarly focused on recovery of health care costs. It concluded that the imposition of the Health Impact Fee "seeks to recover those costs from the settling defendants which are prohibited by the settlement agreement." Although like respondents' argument the district court's memorandum is also lacking in some specificity, by "those costs," we assume the court meant "state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use," referenced in the court's preceding paragraph. In fact, the essence of the court's conclusion that the imposition of the Health Impact Fee violates the settlement agreement seems to be that the purpose of the Health Impact Fee legislation "was to seek government reimbursement for the costs associated with tobacco," because the court stated "[t]hat the state sought reimbursement of tobacco-related health care costs clearly violates the Settlement Agreement."

The state counters that the settlement agreement was not intended, as respondents insist, to restrict future legislative acts. According to the state, the purpose of the settlement agreement was to resolve only adjudicatory claims, such as those asserted by the state in its lawsuit. Arguing that the state participated in the settlement agreement only in its proprietary, rather than its sovereign, capacity, the state contends that the release of future claims based on respondents' future conduct meant only that the state released claims, obligations, or liabilities it could attempt to establish through future litigation, including any claims for recovery of tobacco-related health care costs. In other words, the state says it gave up the right to sue respondents in the future to recover damages, including health care costs, from future wrongful conduct of respondents. The reference to "statutory" claims or liabilities in the release, the state asserts, was to legislatively-created claims for relief that it could assert in future lawsuits, such as consumer fraud actions. The state contends the settlement agreement did not, and could not, release respondents from future regulation by the legislature, including future financial obligations the legislature might impose on the tobacco industry generally.[3]

[3] The state also contests respondents' assertion that the only tangible value of the settlement was a broad release of claims for future smoking-related health care costs. Rather, the state argues, significant other benefits inured to respondents, even under a more narrow reading of the release. For example, respondent manufacturers were relieved of the uncertainty of a possible adverse verdict, which could have resulted in awards of compensatory and punitive damages greater than the agreed-to settlement amounts and which could potentially have been used against respondent manufacturers in similar litigation then pending around the country. Additionally, the state asserts the release of future claims freed respondent manufacturers from the potential of

The state argues further that if the settlement agreement were construed broadly to bar future legislative action that imposes financial obligations on respondents' products merely because the proceeds are earmarked for payment of future health care costs, the agreement would constitute a surrender of sovereign legislative authority, particularly the taxing and police powers.[4] The state contends that under the "unmistakability doctrine," a contract cannot be construed to waive or surrender a sovereign power of the state unless the contract does so in unmistakable language, which, the state further asserts, is not to be found in the settlement agreement.

As explained in more detail below, we conclude that to construe the settlement agreement as respondents urge, that is, to waive the legislature's authority to enact revenue measures to recover tobacco-related health care costs, would be a surrender of the legislature's sovereign power. As a result, the unmistakability doctrine applies and requires that we not so construe the settlement agreement unless it surrenders sovereign power in unmistakable terms. We do not find the requisite unequivocal language in the settlement agreement, and therefore conclude that the Health Impact Fee legislation does not violate the terms of the agreement.

The unmistakability doctrine is a rule of contract construction that provides the sovereign powers of a state further litigation seeking to recover future damages, including, but not limited to, future health care costs. We agree that these benefits of the settlement agreement are both tangible and significant.

[4] The parties disagree whether the Health Impact Fee is a tax or a fee. We need not resolve that dispute because, whether the Health Impact Fee is a tax enacted under the taxing power or a regulatory fee enacted under the police power, it is undisputedly an exercise of a sovereign power of the legislature.

cannot be contracted away except in "unmistakable" terms. The United States Supreme Court's recent explanation of the historical underpinnings of the unmistakability doctrine is helpful in appreciating the purposes and application of the doctrine. See United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 871-79 (1996) (plurality opinion). The plurality in Winstar explained that the unmistakability doctrine was developed in early cases applying the Contract Clause of the U.S. Constitution to state contracts. Winstar, 518 U.S. at 874. "Although that Clause made it possible for state legislatures to bind their successors by entering into contracts, it soon became apparent that such contracts could become a threat to the sovereign responsibilities of state governments." Id. As the Winstar plurality explained, two limitations developed to protect state regulatory powers: the "reserved powers" doctrine, under which certain sovereign powers of the state could not be contracted away, and the "unmistakability" doctrine, a canon of construction under which "neither the right of taxation, nor any other power of sovereignty, will be held * * * to have been surrendered, unless such surrender has been expressed in terms too plain to be mistaken." Id. at 874-75 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Summarizing recent applications of the unmistakability doctrine, the plurality explained that neither silence nor ambiguous terms in a contract will be construed as effecting a waiver of sovereign authority. Id. at 878 ("[A] contract with a sovereign government will not be read to include an unstated term exempting the other contracting party from the application of a subsequent sovereign act * * *, nor will an ambiguous term of a * * * contract be construed as a conveyance or surrender of sovereign power."); see also Bowen v. Pub. Agencies Opposed to Soc. Sec. Entrapment, 477 U.S. 41, 52 (1986).

Although not using the phrase "unmistakability doctrine," we explained the same principles as early as 1908. In State v. Great Northern Railway Co., a railroad challenged legislation increasing the rate of taxation on it on the basis that the railroad had been guaranteed a lower tax rate by the railroad's state charter. 119 N.W. 202, 203-05 (Minn. 1908), aff'd, 216 U.S. 206 (1910). Although at the time the charter had been granted the legislature was free to limit its power of taxation by contract, we explained that the power of taxation was a sovereign prerogative and therefore a contractual limitation on that power should not be found based on inferences or ambiguous language. See id. at 205. Rather, a contract purporting to limit the state's right to tax in the future "is to be strictly construed, and must be in language and terms too clear to admit of doubt." Id. at 205 (citing Chicago, Burlington & Kan. City R.R. v. Guffey, 120 U.S. 569 (1887)).

Respondents argue that the unmistakability doctrine does not apply here because the settlement agreement infringed neither the taxation power nor the police power. Instead, respondents argue that in the settlement agreement the state simply assumed the risk that "it would not be able to impose new liabilities for the State's smoking-attributable health care costs beyond the liability created by the Settlement Agreement." Respondents contend such "risk-shifting" does not affect sovereign powers and does not, therefore, trigger the unmistakability doctrine. Respondents rely on the plurality opinion in Winstar, 518 U.S. at 880, for this risk-shifting argument. But respondents' argument misapplies the concept discussed in that case.

The plurality in Winstar explained that the application of the unmistakability doctrine differs according to the type of obligations assumed by the government and the consequences of enforcing them.[5] 518 U.S. at 880. At one end of the [5] Because it is necessary to examine not only the nature of the government's obligation, but also the consequences of enforcing the obligation, respondents' argument that the unmistakability doctrine is inapplicable simply because the settlement agreement was entered into by the state in its proprietary capacity does not adequately address the issue.

spectrum are obligations to which the unmistakability doctrine always applies, that is, "claims for enforcement of contractual obligations that could not be recognized without effectively limiting sovereign authority," such as a claim for a tax rebate based on an agreement for a tax exemption. Id. Because granting a tax rebate would essentially negate the exercise of the taxing power, the unmistakability doctrine would have to be satisfied, according to the plurality. Id. At the other end of the spectrum are ordinary contracts, such as "humdrum supply contracts," where sovereign power is not compromised by enforcement of the promise made, and the unmistakability doctrine therefore never applies. Id. In between these poles, the plurality stated, there are an "enormous variety" of contracts under which performance may or may not involve the exercise or the forbearance of a sovereign power. Id. As to these contracts, the plurality said:

> So long as such a contract is reasonably construed to include a risk-shifting component that may be enforced without effectively barring the exercise of that [sovereign] power, the enforcement of the risk allocation raises nothing for the unmistakability doctrine to guard against, and there is no reason to apply it.

Id. (emphasis added).

Applying these principles in Winstar, the plurality found the unmistakability doctrine inapplicable because the plaintiffs did not claim the contracts, which promised application of a specific regulatory accounting practice to them, barred enforcement of changed regulatory requirements adopted by the government agency. See id. at 881, 887. Rather, the plaintiffs asserted only that the government was required to pay damages as a result of its failure to maintain the previous regulatory structure as to plaintiffs, as it had promised. Id. at 871. Moreover, the damages sought by the plaintiffs would not effectively negate the exercise of sovereign power in changing the regulatory requirements by depriving the government of money it would otherwise have been entitled to receive, as would a tax rebate. See id. at 882-83.

Here, in asserting that the settlement agreement resulted only in risk-shifting, respondents explain that risk-shifting as follows: "[T]he State assumed the risk that future legislation would create additional 'liabilities of any nature whatsoever' that would fall within the Release and thus be unenforceable as to the Settling Defendants' products." (Emphasis added.) Thus, in contrast to the plaintiffs in Winstar, respondents argue that the consequence of the promise made by the state is that the exercise of sovereign power by the legislature is unenforceable as to them and their products. In other words, respondents do not posit a "risk-shifting component that may be enforced without effectively barring the exercise of that [sovereign] power." Winstar, 518 U.S. at 880. Rather, the very relief respondents seek requires the state either to exempt respondents from the exercise of the state's sovereign powers to tax and to regulate, or to surrender those powers with respect to the cigarette industry altogether. Therefore, contrary to respondents' argument, even the risk-shifting analysis of the plurality in Winstar requires application of the unmistakability doctrine in the circumstances of this case.

The district court did not rely on the risk-shifting theory, but nevertheless declined to apply the unmistakability doctrine, finding that the settlement agreement "involves neither the eradication [n]or usurpation of [the state's] sovereign power but its assent to a contract, of the nature and type, which the state enters into every day in a variety of situations." If by this reference to "everyday" contracts the court meant that the settlement agreement falls into the category the plurality in Winstar described as "humdrum supply contracts," as to which sovereign power is not compromised by enforcement of the promise made, we cannot agree. Rather, as construed by the court and advocated by respondents, the release in the settlement agreement purports to bar the future exercise of the sovereign police powers of the state. It is in this respect that the settlement agreement implicates the unmistakability doctrine.

The district court's conclusion that the release did not infringe on sovereign powers may also be based on its conclusion that the release would not bar the imposition of a tax on respondents' products. The court found that the Health Impact Fee is a "fee," not a tax, and concluded the legislature's imposition of a "fee" is barred by the state's release, although a "tax" would not be barred. It appears that respondents agree, conceding that a "general excise tax" imposed on tobacco products would not be contrary to the release. But respondents contend a revenue measure expressly earmarked to fund tobacco-related health care costs is barred, regardless of whether it is considered a tax or a fee. In terms of applicability of the unmistakability doctrine, however, neither the label "tax" or "fee" nor the specification or lack thereof for spending the funds so generated is relevant. Either way, the revenue measure would be an exercise of the legislature's sovereign power, and, if enforcement of the contractual obligation alleged would block exercise of a sovereign power of the state, it matters not whether the particular power negated is the taxing power or the police power.[6] [6] The state argues that under Minn. Const. art. X, § 1, the taxing power cannot be contracted away, even in unmistakable terms. Article X, section 1, which was enacted after the grant of the railroad charter at issue in the Great Northern Railway decision, provides that "[t]he power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away." This argument would apply if the Health Impact Fee were a tax, but we need not decide that issue, because our resolution of the case under the unmistakability doctrine does not turn on whether it is a fee or a tax.

The Supreme Court has noted that the unmistakability doctrine serves "the dual purposes of limiting contractual incursions on a State's sovereign

We therefore conclude that we must apply the unmistakability doctrine in assessing whether, as respondents argue, the settlement agreement effectuated a broad waiver of future claims that includes legislative enactments to recover tobacco-related health care costs. We must examine the language of the settlement agreement to determine not just whether it supports a waiver of the legislature's power to enact future revenue measures expressly intended to address the costs of tobacco-related health care, but whether it does so in unmistakable terms. We turn now to that task.

In doing so, we are guided by the principles of construction stated in Great Northern Railway and Winstar. We are not to draw inferences from indefinite language or make presumptions from uncertain language. Great N. Ry. Co., 106 Minn. at 322, 119 N.W. at 205; Winstar, 518 U.S. at 874. Rather, the settlement agreement is to be strictly construed, and any waiver of sovereign power must be "in language and terms too clear to admit of doubt." Great N. Ry. Co., 106 Minn. at 322, 119 N.W. at 205; see also Winstar, 518 U.S. at 874.

Respondents argue that the language of the settlement agreement is sufficiently clear to satisfy the unmistakability doctrine. In particular, respondents argue that the phrase "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" is unequivocally as broad as can be, and the specific reference to "statutory" liabilities and claims makes it clear that legislatively-created liabilities and claims are included in the release. Finally, powers and of avoiding difficult constitutional questions about the extent of State authority to limit the subsequent exercise of legislative power." Winstar, 518 U.S. at 875. It serves both of those salutary purposes here as well, also rendering unnecessary rulings on the parties' additional arguments about the scope of the attorney general's authority to bind the state legislature and whether the legislature ratified the settlement agreement.

respondents point to the language in the settlement agreement that references "any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use or exposure to Tobacco Products" as clearly defining the waiver in terms of those specific costs.

We disagree. Application of the unmistakability doctrine compels the conclusion that the settlement agreement cannot be construed to waive the legislature's sovereign authority under the tax and police powers to enact revenue measures, even if earmarked for payment of tobacco-related health care costs. We cannot say that the language of the settlement agreement effects such a waiver of the state's sovereign powers in language "too clear to admit of doubt." Great N. Ry. Co., 119 N.W. at 205. Although the phrase "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" is broad, it is insufficiently specific to meet the requirements of the unmistakability doctrine. The language mentions neither the police nor the taxing power. Nor does the language expressly waive the state's right to impose future taxes or fees on respondents or their products, or expressly waive the state's right to further regulate the cigarette industry in the future.

Moreover, we cannot help but note that the phrase "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" (or similar language) is commonly used in general release forms in disputes having nothing to do with any state sovereign power. Where the language of a contract is argued to surrender sovereign powers of the state, we believe the unmistakability doctrine and the principles on which it is premised require more particularized identification of the waiver intended than is conveyed by boilerplate release language. Accordingly, we construe the settlement agreement not to bar enforcement of the Health Impact Fee.

Our conclusion is buttressed by the fact that key provisions of the settlement agreement are more consistent with the narrower interpretation of the scope of the claims released that is advocated by the state than with the broad waiver of legislative authority advanced by respondents.

One such provision is the clause that defines the claims that are satisfied by the payments respondent manufacturers make each year under the settlement agreement. The clause provides that such payments to the state:

> are in satisfaction of all of the State of Minnesota's claims for damages incurred by the State in the year of such payment or earlier years related to the subject matter of this action, including, without limitation, claims for equitable and injunctive relief, claims for health care expenditures and claims for punitive damages.

(Emphasis added.) The satisfaction of claims clearly includes claims for health care expenditures, but it equally clearly is limited to the subject matter of the tobacco litigation. This supports the state's view that even the future payments to be made under the settlement agreement resolve only claims the state could pursue through litigation.

In addition, although the release provision broadly defines the term "claim," using among other language the phrase "liabilities of any nature whatsoever," this "claim" definition is qualified by subparagraphs a and b that limit the source of claims covered by the release. Thus, the release language provides that the state releases all claims (as broadly defined in the initial paragraph):

> b. for future conduct, only as to monetary Claims directly or indirectly based on, arising out of or in any way related to, in whole or in part, the use of or exposure to Tobacco Products manufactured in the ordinary course of business, including without limitation any future claims for reimbursement for health > care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products.

(Emphasis added.) The description of the released claims as relating to "future conduct" is also more consistent with a release limited to claims the state could pursue through litigation than one broadly inclusive of legislative action as well.

Further, it is respondents that are released from "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" by the settlement agreement, not respondents' customers and not respondents' products, although that would be the effect of respondents' arguments. As we have noted, it is retail cigarette purchasers who ultimately pay the Health Impact Fee. Respondent manufacturers have no liability or obligation to pay the Health Impact Fee. Respondent distributors remit the Health Impact Fee to the state when they purchase tax stamps, but they are reimbursed for the Health Impact Fee by cigarette retailers who are, in turn, reimbursed by cigarette purchasers. The settlement agreement specifically bars claims of third-party beneficiaries, yet the effect of respondents' arguments is to extend the benefits of the release to retail cigarette purchasers. The bar against third-party beneficiaries is more consistent, in light of Minnesota's cigarette pricing scheme, with the notion that the settlement agreement resolved only claims that could have been brought against these respondents in future litigation than with the notion that the release ensured that the state would not increase cigarette taxes or fees paid by retail cigarette purchasers if the proceeds are to be used to pay for smoking-related health care costs.

Finally, we note that the specific language in the release related to future claims for health care costs, on which respondents rely so heavily, is inconsistent with their own arguments about the scope of the release. Although respondents and the district court both interpret the limitation imposed by the release on future legislative action as restricted to measures specifically directed at recovery of health care costs, we find no basis for that restriction in the language of the release. Specifically, the language in subparagraph b, expressly referencing claims for future health care costs, contains no such restriction. Instead, what is released are claims for respondents' future conduct based on or related to the use of or exposure to tobacco products, and claims for reimbursement of health care costs are simply included among those claims. Therefore, if the language of the release is construed to limit future legislative action, that limitation would not be restricted by the settlement agreement to action directed at recovery of health care costs, but would be virtually without limit. Just as respondents apparently considered it untenable to suggest that the settlement agreement was intended to effect such a broad waiver of legislative authority, we consider it untenable to adopt such a construction.

We conclude that respondents have failed to sustain their burden to show that the release waives the state's sovereign powers in unmistakable terms. We therefore construe the release of claims in the settlement agreement not to preclude legislative enactment of revenue measures directed at recovering future tobacco-related health care costs generally or the Health Impact Fee in particular. The district court erred in granting respondents' motions to enjoin the imposition of the Health Impact Fee on their products, and erred in granting intervenors' motions to enjoin the imposition of the Health Impact Fee on their products.

III.

The district court ruled that imposition of the Health Impact Fee not only violated the settlement agreement, but is also unconstitutional as an impairment of contract in violation of the Contract Clause of the Minnesota Constitution, Minn. Const. art. I, § 11. Because we construe the settlement agreement not to waive the legislature's authority to enact future legislative revenue measures to recover health care costs, the enactment of the Health Impact Fee did not impair that agreement and therefore did not violate the Contract Clause.

The district court also ruled that enforcement of the Health Impact Fee against only the intervenors' products would violate their constitutional guarantees of equal protection. Based on our ruling, the Health Impact Fee will be enforced as to respondents' products, and there remains no basis for the intervenors' claim of selective enforcement.

Finally, the district court ruled that respondents and intervenors are entitled to refunds or credits to the extent they paid the Health Impact Fee. Because our ruling is that the Health Impact Fee is enforceable as to respondents' and intervenors' products, there is no basis for refunds or credits.

While I concur in the result reached by the court, I write separately to make two points.

First, the state's 1994 litigation against the major tobacco manufacturers was premised on the notion that the tobacco industry – "not the State of Minnesota, or its citizens" – should pay for the health care costs caused by tobacco use. Despite this premise, nothing in the 1998 settlement agreement between the state and respondents required respondents themselves to bear the cost of the settlement. Indeed, as we observed in Council of Independent Tobacco Manufacturers of America v. State, the manufacturers simply raised their prices to cover the cost of the settlement. ___ N.W.2d ___, 2006 WL 648137 at *2 (Minn. Mar. 16, 2006). As a result, while the state has collected hundreds of millions of dollars in annual payments from tobacco companies thus far under the terms of the 1998 settlement agreement, the lion's share – perhaps all – of the cost of that settlement has actually been borne by smokers.

It also appears that, despite the premise of the 1994 litigation that tobacco companies should pay for the health effects of their products, none of the proceeds from the tobacco settlement have been used to pay for smoking-related health care costs. See Act of May 25, 1999, ch. 243, art. 16, § 3(b), 1999 Minn. Laws 2055, 2243 (specifying that annual tobacco settlement payments go to the state's general fund). Indeed, in 2003, the one-time settlement payments designated in 1999 by the legislature for tobacco use prevention and medical education were transferred to the state's general fund. See Act of June 8, 2003, ch. 21, art. 11, § 33, 2003 Minn. Laws 1st Spec. Sess. 2418, 2560, Act of May 25, 1999, ch. 245, art. 11, §§ 1-3, 1999 Minn. Laws 2264, 2672.

Now, with the imposition of the Health Impact Fee and the pass-through of that fee/tax to the consumer, smokers are once again paying for the state's smoking-related health care costs – the same costs one could reasonably have hoped were being paid for by the tobacco companies through the 1998 settlement. On the record before us, it cannot be determined whether the settlement payments, combined with the Health Impact Fee, exceed the state's smoking-related health care costs. But, to the extent that what smokers who are not parties to the settlement agreement pay towards the settlement payments and the Health Impact Fee exceeds those costs, this scheme exacts a direct, although hidden, tax on smokers to fund any manner of nonsmoking-related state expenditures. This hidden tax is neither imposed on nor borne by any other Minnesota taxpayers. Thus, I find this scheme troubling.

Second, while I concur in the result reached by the court, I would reach that result in a different way. I would reach that result in a different way because it is not clear to me that the unmistakability doctrine applies here and because even if it does apply we need not apply it to resolve this case.

I read the settlement agreement and its release of "claims" to unambiguously cover no more than the claims the state brought or could have brought against respondents in the 1994 tobacco litigation or could bring in future litigation. Imposition of the Health Impact Fee does not create such a "claim." Therefore, I would hold that under the unambiguous language of the settlement agreement, imposition of the Health Impact Fee did not violate the settlement agreement.[7]

[7] In the end, respondents' challenge to the imposition of the Health Impact Fee would seem to be much ado about not very much. While complaining about the Health Impact Fee, respondents acknowledge that the state could impose an excise tax in the exact same amount as the Health Impact Fee and they would have no basis to challenge such a tax. Moreover, when all is said and done, the Health Impact Fee as imposed by the legislature is borne not by respondents but by retail cigarette purchasers.

No. C1-94-8565.

Dec. 20, 2005.

ORDER

FETSCH, J.

The amended Motion of the Defendants' and Defendants' distributors for enforcement of the Settlement Agreement requests that the Court find that the health impact fee (HIF) violates the Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment (Settlement Agreement) as to the Defendants and the Defendants' distributors and further requests that the Court declare that the HIF violates the contract clauses of the United States and Minnesota Constitutions.

The intervenors (A.H. Hermel, et al.) move for the same relief. Commonwealth seeks the Court to declare, if it exempts the Defendants from the HIF, the HIF unconstitutional and void.

Counsel for Independent Tobacco Manufacturers of America asks, assuming the named defendants are found not responsible for the HIF, the Court to declare the HIF unconstitutional because it would selectively enforce the HIF against entities similarly situated, constituting a special law because the settling manufacturers and distributors are exempted from the fee and because the distinction between it and the other settling manufacturers and distributors constitutes an arbitrary and capricious classification not relevant to the stated purposes of the HIF, thereby violating the due process provisions of the state and federal constitutions.

Based upon the arguments of counsel and the entire file:

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED THAT:

1. The oral Order made at the hearing on September 29, 2005 to allow intervention by A.H. Hermel Candy & Tobacco Company, et al., Commonwealth Brands, Inc., and the Council of Independent Tobacco Manufacturers of America, previously granted, is now CONFIRMED.

2. The Motions of the defendants to find that the Health Impact Fee violates the Settlement Agreement and is unconstitutional are GRANTED.

3. The Motions of the Intervenors to find that the Health Impact Fee cannot be enforced against them because it constitutes a selective enforcement and deprives them of equal protection under the law is GRANTED.

4. The defendants and the intervenors are entitled to credit or refunds, to the extent paid.

5. The attached Memorandum is made a part hereof.

6. Notice to Counsel by mail is sufficient for all purposes.

MEMORANDUM

INTERVENTION

The intervenors have satisfied each prong of Rule 24.01 and 24.02, Minn.R.Civ.P. Intervention is to be granted liberally. Luthen v. Luthen, 596 N.W.2d 278 (Minn. Ct. App. 1999). The holding in Van Meveren v. Van Meveren, 603 N.W.2d 671 (Minn. Ct. App. 1999) is not apposite to the analysis. Van Meveren denied intervention to an adult daughter of the parties in a custody matter involving her minor brothers. That decision must be read in the context of Minnesota statutory and case law. A third person, that is person not one of the parents, may seek custody by a third party custody petition. An adult daughter does not otherwise have a cogniziable interest in the custody dispute over her minor brothers.

The rule is designed to permit intervention as a right if, as a practical matter, the Court's decision in the pending action could impair or impede that party's ability to protect its interest. Here the intervenors have: (1) timely moved to intervene; (2) have an interest relating to the property or transaction that is the subject of the action, albeit that that interest is contingent and dependent upon how the Court addresses the defendants' motion; (3) have shown that the Court's judgment could impair or impede the parties' ability to protect that contingent interest; and, (4) the intervenors' interests are not adequately represented by the existing parties. Nash v. Wollan, 656 N.W.2d 585, 591 (Minn. Ct. App. 2003).

Permissive intervention lies within the District Court's discretion. Here that discretion is exercised in favor of the intervenors who would be unduly delayed or prejudiced by a denial of their participation. Nash v. Wollan, supra. The intervenors have shown "a special and concrete stake in the ultimate determination ." Id

HEALTH IMPACT FEE

The Legislature enacted a health impact fee (H.I.F.), the stated purpose of which was "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use and to reduce tobacco use, particularly by youths." Laws 2005, First Special Session, Ch. 4, Art. 4, Sec. 2., subd.1.

This legislation seeks to recover those costs from the settling defendants which are prohibited by the settlement agreement.

In addition to the payments required by the agreement, the defendants also agreed to limitations upon their conduct, including not to challenge certain legislation, to produce documents relating to the enactment or repeal or in opposition to state legislation or state executive action, to disclose payments to any state or local official in Minnesota, to discontinue billboards and transit advertisements of tobacco products in this state, not to make any motion picture in the United States which makes reference to or uses as a prop any cigarette, cigarette package, etc., and to cease marketing, licensing, distributing, selling or offering by direct mail.

The limitations were presumably sought by the State to advance the non-smoking cause and thereby lessen the State's health care costs.

The Court rejects the Attorney General's argument that the Settlement Agreement unconstitutionally inhibits the power of the Legislature. The Legislature, while not signatory to, has acquiesced and assented to the settlement by its conduct of actively employing settlement funds to achieve legislative purposes.[1]

The defendants' distributors are parties because the settlement names them as beneficiaries. S.A., III..B., p-12.

The Health Impact Fee, enacted July 14, 2005, became effective August 1, 2005. The purpose of the fee was to reimburse the state for "the cost of smoking attributable expenses incurred by government health care programs [and will be 75 cents per pack]." Office of Governor Tim Pawlenty, Governor Pawlenty Leads Efforts to Solve Legislative Impasse (May 20, 2005), at 1.

The Minnesota Department of Revenue, Use of Fees versus Taxes (updated May 18, 2005) characterized a fee as "approximat[ing] the costs incurred by, or imposed upon government. The inclusion of the bill within an "Omnibus Health and Human Services Bill" providing policy and funding, establishing the tobacco health impact fee and appropriating money" clearly indicates that the $.75 per pack was not a tax. Had it been a tax it would have been likely included in the "Omnibus Tax Bill" passed the same day, which bill had provisions relating to the collection of excise and sales taxes on tobacco products. See H.F. 138, Art. 6, Section 20. That the state sought reimbursement of tobaccorelated health care costs clearly violates the Settlement Agreement.

The mechanism by which the funds collected by the $.75 H.I.F. also militate against finding that it is a tax, rather than a fee, because the Human Services Commissioner must annually certify to the Finance Commissioner the "tobacco use attributable costs." Upon receipt of that certification, the Finance Commissioner is then mandated to transfer from the H.I.F. fund to the general fund an amount sufficient to offset the certified expenditures. The H.I.F. is imposed upon and collected from the distributors of tobacco products. It is they who are statutorily commanded to pay the H.I.F. and their failure to do so subjects them to license revocation.

A separate lawsuit is not necessary in order to confer jurisdiction upon the district court. That jurisdiction is retained and preserved by the Settlement Agreement, I.A., p. 3.

The Attorney General's reading of the release, which would limit its operating effect only to "judicial claims", ignores definition of claims within the settlement agreement, which is much broader, and includes "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" including those of a "statutory" nature. The H.I.F. is statutory in nature and directly imposes that from which the defendants are protected by the Settlement Agreement.

The Governor's argument that the H.I.F. can be applied to the settling defendants because it was designed "to reduce tobacco use, particularly among youths," is similarly foreclosed by the Settlement Agreement. The Governor's argument that the imposition of the fee H.I.F. on the distributor does not violate the agreement fails to recognize that the distributors are protected in the same manner and to the same extent as are the defendants.

The essential benefits of the settlement agreement to the defendants was that it reduced to liquidated form, those damages which the state sought to collect by its lawsuit. The state is bound, like any other party is bound, to the contracts to which it freely and knowingly enters, and from which it benefits. For the state now to argue that it is not bound by its contract undermines and potentially eviserates the constitutional provision contained in Article I, Section 11 of the Minnesota Constitution which provides that "No bill of obtainder, ex post facto law, or any law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed."

The argument that any interference with the collection of the H.I.F. is an impairment of the legislative power is flawed. The impairment is self-imposed by the Settlement Agreement. While the Legislature is free to raise revenue by means of a tax, and all parties agree that there would be no basis to override such a tax, the purpose of this legislation was to seek governmental reimbursement for the costs associated with tobacco which distinguishes the H.I.F from a tax and makes it a fee.

In the context of the argument of whether or not a municipality's enactment was a revenue-raising device, which would be prohibited, or a fee, the Supreme Court indicated that the key to determining whether or not a particular item is a fee or tax is whether or not it has a direct relationship to the costs which the reimbursement (fee) seeks. Country Jo, Inc. v. City of Eagan, 560 N.W.2d 681, 686 (Minn. 1997). The totality of all circumstances, which include the descriptive information released by the Governor's Office and the Department of Revenue, as well as the statutorily expressed purpose, all require the conclusion that the H.I.F. is a fee. The Attorney General makes a number of other arguments in an effort to preserve the H.I.F. The Legislature, however, acknowledges the Settlement Agreement by having passed Minn. Stat. § 297F.24 which contains a "fee in lieu of settlement" imposed upon nonsettling tobacco companies. By this enactment the Legislature approves and endorses the Settlement Agreement, even if its receipt and use of the funds from the agreement were not sufficient to bind it.

The Attorney General argues that the "unmistakability doctrine" is applicable to preserve the H.I.F. He argues that the state cannot waive its soveriegn powers unless it does so in umistakable terms, which, he claims, it has not done. Here the state has consented to a Settlement Agreement which involves neither the eradication or usurpation of its soveriegn power but its assent to a contract, of the nature and type, which the state enters into every day in a variety of situations.

The defendants, in addition to their contractual claim, have proven a "contracts clause" violation which requires them, first, to prove the existence of a contract; second, the impairment of that obligation by state law; and, third, that the impairment is not a reasonable means to a legitimate end protecting the vital interests of the community.

To demonstrate "a significant and legitimate public interest" the "level of impairment increases the level of scrutiny to which the legislation is subjected." Christenson v. Minneapolis Municipal Employees, 331 N.W.2d 740, 750-751 (Minn. 1983). Here the state seeks to abrogate that which what it has promised but offers neither to forego future payments or to refund past payments. It is impossible to find that the legislation is a reasonable device which serves the end of protecting the vital interests of the community.

INTERVENORS

By holding that the H.I.F. is not applicable to the distributors of the settling defendants, there is created this dichotomy. The distributors of the nonsettling defendants must collect the $.75 per cigarette package fee, whereas the distributors of the settling defendants do not. The resultant situation creates an anomoly in the marketplace by which the settling defendants' products will have a distinct marketplace advantage in price. The purpose of the legislation was to recover health-related costs and to prevent tobacco use by youths. The youths who smoke will not by this legislation cease smoking. They will cease smoking the more expensive cigarettes and buy the less expensive cigarettes from the settling defendants' distributors.

Minnesota already imposes a fee on Commonwealth and other non-settling manufacturers to cover the health-related costs of smoking. This is a $.35 per pack fee. Minn. Stat. § 297F.24 (1)(a). The fee is inapplicable to the distributors of the settling defendants and was designed to equalize payments between the settling defendants and other companies that have not settled. The legislative purpose of the H.I.F. was to require all manufacturers to pay. In light of my decision above, the H.I.F., as applied to the distributors of the nonsettling defendants, who comprise approximately ten percent of the market, will be selectively enforced only as to the remaining ten percent. None of the statute's stated statutory goals will be fulfilled. The nonsettling defendants will be singled out and deprived of equal protection under the Uniform Taxation Clause of the Minnesota Constitution. The statute fails because what is left are distinctions which are manifestly arbitrary and fanciful and because it contains a classification not justified by any distinctive means peculiar to this class and contains a legislative purpose which no longer can be achieved. E.g., Miller Brewing Co. v. State, 284 N.W.2d 353, 356 (Minn. 1979).

If the resulting classification does not promote the purposes of the statute, it can no longer stand. Kolton v. County of Anoka, 645 N.W.2d 403, 411 (Minn. 2002). Requiring the nonsettling distributors to pay the H.I.F. would be the functional equivalent of a special legislation singling out for special privilege the settling defendants and in derogation to the nonsettling defendants under Art. 12, Sec. 1, Minnesota Constitution. See also Nichols v. Walter, 33 N.W. 800, 801 (Minn. 1887), standing for the proposition that a law which is general in its passage but special in its application violates the constitution.

There is no manner in which the legislation can be compartmentalized so as to save it in part while declaring it unconstitutional in part. The law was designed to apply to all cigarette sales and now fails because it is only applicable to ten percent of those sales. See Minn. Cable Commc'ns Ass'n v. Minn. Cable Commc'ns Bd., 288 N.W.2d 721, 723 (Minn. 1980).

APPENDIX G -- BRIEF OF RESPONDENTS BEFORE THE MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT

v.
PHILIP MORRIS USA, INC., et al., Respondents.

No. A05-2540.

March 2, 2006.

Brief for Respondents Settling Defendants and Defendants' Distributors

LEGAL ISSUES

I. Are the Settling Defendants and their distributors released from liability under the Health Impact Fee, which attempts "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use," by the 1998 Settlement Agreement and Release, which releases the Settling Defendants and their distributors from "liabilities of any nature whatsoever," including "statutory" liability, "for reimbursement for [state] health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products?"

The district court held that the Health Impact Fee "seeks to recover those costs from the settling defendants which are prohibited by the settlement agreement," and that the "state sought reimbursement of tobacco-related health care costs [through the Health Impact Fee] clearly violates the Settlement Agreement." (State's Appendix ("App.") 12-13.)

Downing v. Independent School District No. 9, 291 N.W. 613 (Minn. 1940);

United States Trust Co. of New York v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1 (1977).

II. Does the State's enforcement of the Health Impact Fee as to Settling Defendants' products violate the Contracts Clauses of the Minnesota and United States Constitutions by impairing the State's contractual obligation under the Settlement Agreement to release the Settling Defendants and their distributors from any further "liabilities of any nature whatsoever," including "statutory" liability, for the State's health care costs?

The district court held that the Health Impact Fee "undermines and potentially eviscerates the constitutional provision contained in Article I, Section 11 of the Minnesota Constitution which provides that 'No . . . law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed,' " and likewise violates the Contracts Clause of the United States Constitution. (App. 14-15.)

III. Do the defenses invoked by the State to avoid enforcement of the Settlement Agreement - the unmistakability doctrine, separation of powers, and Article X, Section 1 of the Minnesota Constitution - apply where, as here, the Settlement Agreement does not purport to surrender any of the State's powers, but simply releases any future liability for reimbursement of State health care costs attributable to smoking?

The district court held that the unmistakability doctrine, separation of powers, and Article X, Section 1 do not apply here because, among other reasons, the Settlement Agreement "involves neither the eradication or usurpation of its sovereign power." (App. 16.)

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On May 8, 1998, Respondents Philip Morris USA Inc., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, and Lorillard Tobacco Company ("Settling Defendants") entered into a Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment with the State of Minnesota ("Settlement Agreement"), ending litigation initiated by the State in 1994. (App. 37-82.[1] The Settlement Agreement requires the Settling Defendants to make annual payments of hundreds of millions of dollars and to abide by a series of advertising, marketing, and other restrictions on future conduct. (App. 43-50, 54-59.) These monetary and other obligations continue in perpetuity. (Id.) In exchange, the only tangible benefit provided to the Settling Defendants under the Settlement Agreement was a broad, comprehensive "Release and Discharge" of Settling Defendants and their distributors from all liabilities - past, present, and future - for reimbursement of State health care costs attributable to tobacco use (the "Release" or "Release Provision"). (App. 50-52.) The Release provides in relevant part:

> [T]he State of Minnesota shall release and forever discharge all [Settling] Defendants and their . . . distributors . . . from . . . liabilities of any nature whatsoever . . . whether legal, equitable or statutory ("Claims") that the State of Minnesota . . . ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall or may have . . . for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products.

(App. 50-52.)

On July 14, 2005, Governor Pawlenty signed into law a statute imposing a 75-cent per pack "Health Impact Fee" on all cigarettes sold in the State. (App. 33-36.) The express purpose of the Health Impact Fee is "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use." (App. 33.)

On August 26, 2005, the Settling Defendants and several of their distributors brought a "Motion for Enforcement of Settlement Agreement" in the District Court for Ramsey County, contending that the State's enforcement of the Health Impact Fee as to the Settling Defendants' products constituted an attempt to recover the same costs that the State had already released and was contractually barred from recovering under the Settlement Agreement - health care costs attributable to tobacco use. (App. 1-5.)[2] Settling Defendants and their distributors asked the district court to issue an order enforcing the Settlement Agreement and finding that it is a complete defense and bar to any attempt by the State to collect the Health Impact Fee with respect to Settling Defendants' products. (Id.)

The district court, Honorable Michael F. Fetsch presiding, heard oral argument on the Settling Defendants' motion on September 29, 2005. (Supplemental Appendix ("Supp. App.") 1.) At that time, the court granted the motion to intervene of non-settling cigarette manufacturer Commonwealth Brands, Inc. and the Council of Independent Tobacco Manufacturers of America, as well as Governor Tim Pawlenty's motion to appear as amicus curiae. (Supp. App. 35; App. 9.)

On December 20, 2005, the district court granted the Settling Defendants' motion and issued an Order and Memorandum declaring that enforcement of the Health Impact Fee with respect to the Settling Defendants' products violates both the Settlement Agreement and the Contracts Clauses of the Minnesota and United States Constitutions. (App. 6-18.) The district court found that the Health Impact Fee "seeks to recover those costs from the settling defendants which are prohibited by the settlement agreement" (App. 12), and that the "state sought reimbursement of tobacco-related health care costs [through the Health Impact Fee] clearly violates the Settlement Agreement." (App. 13.) The district court further held that the Health Impact Fee "undermines and potentially eviscerates the constitutional provision contained in Article I, Section 11 of the Minnesota Constitution which provides that 'No . . . law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed,' "and likewise violates the Contracts Clause of the United States Constitution. (App. 14-15.) Finally, the district court also held that the Health Impact Fee also could not be enforced on the products of non-settling tobacco companies. (App. 16-18.)

On December 28, 2005, the State noticed this appeal. (App. 28-30.) On January 18, 2006, by agreement of the parties, the district court stayed its judgment pending appeal and required that the State maintain funds collected during appeal in a separate fund. (App. 19-27.)

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. The State's 1994 Suit for Reimbursement of Tobacco-Related Health Care Expenditures

In 1994, the State filed a lawsuit against numerous tobacco manufacturers, including the Settling Defendants. (Supp. App. 107.) The Attorney General brought suit "on behalf of the State of Minnesota pursuant to his authority under common law, as well as Minn. Stat. §§ 8.01, 8.31, 325D.09-15, 325D.43-45, 325D.49-66, and 325F.67-70," to recover the State's alleged tobacco-related health care expenditures. (Supp. App. 110.)

The suit's purpose was "to vindicate the State's proprietary interest in enforcing the State's right to damages for economic injuries to the State which were caused by the unlawful actions of the cigarette industry." (Id.) These economic injuries included "increased expenditures" by State health care programs, such as "Minnesota's Medicaid Plan, Medical Assistance," "General Assistance Medical Care," "Minnesota Care," and "[t]he State Employee Group Insurance Program," due to tobacco-related illnesses. (Supp. App. 110-13.) In the State's words, the "premise" of its suit was that "the [tobacco] industry - and not the State of Minnesota, or its citizens ⋯ - should pay for the staggering health costs" attributable to tobacco use. (Supp. App. 110.)

B. The State's 1998 Settlement and Release of All Future Claims for Health Care Costs Attributable to Tobacco Use

On May 8, 1998, the State and Settling Defendants signed a Settlement Agreement that settled and released the State's suit and past claims as well as "any future claims for reimbursement for health costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products." (App. 51.) The Attorney General signed the Settlement Agreement on behalf of the "State of Minnesota" as the State's "duly elected and authorized Attorney General" (App. 66), and the parties agreed that the Settlement Agreement would "be final and binding upon all Parties" upon approval by the district court. (App. 60.) The district court approved the Settlement Agreement on May 8, 1998. (App. 82.)

The Settlement Agreement obligates the Settling Defendants to pay hundreds of millions of dollars in "annual payments" into "an account designated in writing by the State" to reimburse the State for health care costs attributable to tobacco. (App. 44.) In particular, the Settling Defendants agreed to make six payments totaling approximately $1.31 billion (subject to annual adjustments for changes in industry-wide volume and inflation) from September 5, 1998 through January 2, 2003. (App. 44-45.) In addition, starting on December 31, 1998, and continuing "annually thereafter on December 31st of each year after 1998" in perpetuity, the Settling Defendants were required to pay 2.55% of the following amounts (again, subject to annual adjustments for changes in industrywide volume and inflation):

1998	$4 Billion
1999	$4.5 Billion
2000	$5 Billion
2001	$6.5 Billion
2002	$6.5 Billion
2003	$8 Billion
Thereafter	$8 Billion.

(App. 47.) Each annual payment is "in satisfaction of all of the State of Minnesota's claims for damages incurred by the State in the year of such payment or earlier years ⋯ including, without limitation⋯ claims for [tobacco-related] health care expenditures." (App. 43.)

Pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, the Settling Defendants have paid the State a total of approximately $2.25 billion to date. (App. 44-47.) The State has been "actively employing settlement funds to achieve legislative purposes" for nearly eight years. (App. 12.) In addition to the foregoing monetary payments, the Settling Defendants agreed to significant restrictions on their future conduct. This included agreements, among other things, (1) not to oppose passage of six specified categories of "future Minnesota legislative proposals or administrative rules" (App. 54, 69); (2) not to "[f]acially challenge the enforceability or constitutionality of existing Minnesota laws or rules relating to tobacco control" (App. 54); and (3) to accept prohibitions on certain marketing, advertising, and promotional activities. (App. 57-58.)

In return for these monetary and other present and future contractual obligations, the only tangible benefit provided to the Settling Defendants under the Settlement Agreement was a broad, comprehensive "Release and Discharge" of all claims by the State - past, present, and future - for reimbursement of health care costs attributable to tobacco. (App. 50-52.) The Release provides:

> [T]he State of Minnesota shall release and forever discharge all [Settling] Defendants and their⋯ distributors ⋯ from any and all manner of civil claims, demands, actions, suits and causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including civil penalties, as well as 9 costs, expenses and attorneys' fees, known or unknown, suspected or unsuspected, accrued or unaccrued, whether legal, equitable or statutory ("Claims") that the State of Minnesota (including any of its past, present or future administrators, representatives, employees, officers, attorneys, agents, representatives, officials acting in their official > capacities, agencies, departments, commissions, and divisions, and whether or not any such person or entity participates in the settlement), whether directly, indirectly, representatively, derivative or in any other capacity, ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall or may have, as follows:

>
> b. for future conduct, only as to monetary Claims directly or indirectly based on, arising out of or in any way related to, in whole or in part, the use of or exposure to Tobacco Products manufactured in the ordinary course of business, including without limitation any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products.

(App. 50-51.) The State further "covenant[ed] and agree[d] that it shall not hereafter sue or seek to establish civil liability against any person or entity covered by [the Release] based, in whole or in part, upon any of the Released Claims, and the State of Minnesota agrees that this covenant and agreement shall be a complete defense to any such civil action or proceeding." (App. 52.) The Release specifically names the Settling Defendants' distributors as released parties. (App. 50.)

The Attorney General signed the Settlement Agreement on behalf of "the State of Minnesota." (App. 66.) The State of Minnesota is defined broadly to include, among others, "any of its past, present or future administrators, representatives, employees, officers, attorneys, agents, representatives, officials acting in their official capacities, agencies, departments, commissions, and divisions, and whether or not any such person or entity participates in the settlement." (App. 51.)

C. The Legislature's Ratification of the Settlement Agreement

The State Legislature has accepted every payment made by the Settling Defendants under the Settlement Agreement. (App. 12.) For nearly eight years, the State has used this revenue to fund various programs and expenditures.[3]

In addition, in 2003, the Legislature enacted Minn. Stat. § 297F.24, entitled "Fee in Lieu of Settlement." Section 297F.24 imposes a 35-cent per pack fee on "nonsettlement cigarettes." Minn. Stat. § 297F.24(a).[4] Section 297F.24 provides that cigarette manufacturers who were not parties to the Settlement Agreement may enter an agreement with the State that mirrors the terms of the Settlement Agreement, and thereby avoid payment of the 35-cent per pack fee.

> [C]igarette[s] manufactured by a person other than a manufacturer that:
> (1) is making annual payments to the state of Minnesota under a settlement of the lawsuit styled as State v. Philip Morris Inc., No. C 1-94-8565 (Minnesota District Court, Second Judicial District)…
> (2) has voluntarily entered into an agreement with the state of Minnesota, approved by the attorney general, agreeing to terms similar to those contained in the settlement agreement, identified in clause (1) including making annual payments to the state, with respect to its national sales of the style of cigarettes, equal to at least 75 percent of the payments that would apply if the manufacturer was one of the four original parties to the settlement agreement required to make annual payments to the state.

D. The State's Creation of a Health Impact Fee To Recover State Health Care Costs Attributable to Tobacco

On July 14, 2005, Governor Pawlenty signed into law a statute creating a 75-cent per pack "Health Impact Fee" on all tobacco products, including Settling Defendants' products, "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use." (App. 33.) The Health Impact Fee became effective on August 1, 2005. (App. 33.)

When Governor Pawlenty first proposed the Health Impact Fee on May 20, 2005, he explained that it "will be related to the cost of smoking attributable expenses incurred by government health care programs." (Supp. App. 166.) He further explained that the 75-cent amount of the fee "was arrived at based on the impact of tobacco use o[n] the state's public funded health programs, such as Medical Assistance, GAMC and Minnesota Care." (Supp. App. 166-67.)

The Health Impact Fee legislation mandates that revenues collected under the Health Impact Fee be credited to a "Health Impact Fund" to be used to pay health care costs that the State attributes to smoking. (App. 33.) Each year, the Commissioner of Human Services must "certify to the commissioner of finance the state share, by fund, of tobacco use attributable costs for the previous fiscal year in Minnesota health care programs, including medical assistance, general assistance medical care, and MinnesotaCare, or other applicable expenditures." (App. 33.) The Commissioner of Finance must then "transfer from the health impact fund to the general fund an amount sufficient to offset the general fund cost of the certified expenditures" for health care costs attributable to tobacco use. (Id.)

To demonstrate that the proposed Health Impact Fee was legally a "fee" and not a "tax," the Governor released a publication of the Minnesota Department of Revenue entitled "Use of Fees vs. Taxes." (Supp. App. 171.) In this publication, the Department of Revenue distinguished the features of fees from those of taxes, specifically noting that a fee "approximate[s] the costs incurred by, or imposed on, government" by an industry. (Id.)

The Health Impact Fee was also included within the "Omnibus Health and Human Services Bill" (App. 13), and dedicated to the payment of the annual health care costs incurred by the State attributable to tobacco use. (App. 33-34.) The entire bill related solely to health and human services. (App. 13.) The same day as that bill was signed into law, an "Omnibus Tax Bill" was enacted, which includes provisions relating to the collection of excise and sales taxes on tobacco products, but does not mention the Health Impact Fee. (App. 13.)

E. The Settling Defendants and Defendants' Distributors' Motion for Enforcement of the Settlement Agreement

On August 26, 2005, the Settling Defendants and several of their distributors filed a "Motion for Enforcement of Settlement Agreement" in the Ramsey County District Court.[5] The Settling Defendants asked the district court to find that the Settlement Agreement acts as a complete defense and bar to any attempt by the State to collect the Health Impact Fee with respect to Settling Defendants' products.

On December 20, 2005, after extensive briefing and argument, the district court granted the Settling Defendants' and Defendants' Distributors' motion. The district court found that the Health Impact Fee violated the plain language of the Settlement Agreement: "[The Health Impact Fee]

[5] The Settlement Agreement provides that the District Court of Ramsey County (Second Judicial District) "shall retain jurisdiction for the purpose of implementing and enforcing this Settlement Agreement. " (App. 39.) The parties also "agree[d] to present any disputes under th[e] Settlement Agreement, including without limitation any claims for breach or enforcement of this Settlement Agreement, exclusively to this Court." (Id.) seeks to recover those costs from the settling defendants which are prohibited by the settlement agreement," namely "reimbursement of tobacco-related health care costs." (App. 12.) The district court rejected the State's argument that the Release applied only to "judicial" or "adjudicatory" claims:

> The Attorney General's reading of the release, which would limit its operating effect to "judicial claims," ignores [the] definition of claims within the settlement agreement, which is much broader, and includes "⋯ liabilities of any nature whatsoever" including those of a "statutory" nature. The [Health Impact Fee] is statutory in nature and directly imposes that from which the defendants are protected by the Settlement Agreement.

(App. 14.)

The district court further held that the Health Impact Fee impaired the Settlement Agreement in violation of the Contracts Clauses of the Minnesota and United States Constitutions:

> The state is bound, like any other party is bound, to the contracts to which it freely and knowingly enters, and from which it benefits. For the state now to argue that it is not bound by its contract undermines and potentially eviscerates the constitutional provision contained in Article I, Section 11 of the Minnesota Constitution which provides that "No ⋯ law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed."

(App. 14-15.)

The district court rejected the State's reliance on the "unmistakability" doctrine, finding that the doctrine did not apply and could not excuse the State's abrogation of its own contractual obligations. (App. 16.) The court likewise rejected the State's separation of powers argument, noting that any doubt on that issue was eliminated by the fact that the Legislature "has acquiesced and assented to the settlement by its conduct of actively employing settlement funds" and in passing a "Fee in Lieu of Settlement," Minn. Stat. § 297F.24. (App. 12, 15.) Finally, applying this Court's well-settled criteria for determining whether a governmental imposition is a tax or a fee, the district court concluded that the Health Impact Fee was a fee and therefore the Minnesota Constitution's ban on the "surrender" of the Legislature's power to tax (Article X, Section 1) did not apply. (App. 15.) Finally, the Court granted the intervenors' motion to prevent the Health Impact Fee from being enforced also against them.

The State now appeals the district court's Order, raising essentially the same grounds that the district court rejected.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

A district court's application of the law and interpretation of contracts are subject to de novo review by this Court. Employers Mut. Cas. Co. v. A.C.C.T., Inc., 580 N.W.2d 490, 493 (Minn. 1998).

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

As the district court held, under the clear and unambiguous terms of the Settlement Agreement, enforcement of the Health Impact Fee with respect to the Settling Defendants' products is an attempt to recover liabilities that the State has already released and for which the Settling Defendants are already paying hundreds of millions of dollars in annual payments in perpetuity. The Health Impact Fee is covered by the plain terms of the Release and cannot be enforced with respect to the Setting Defendants' products without violating the Settlement Agreement and impairing that contract in violation of the Contracts Clauses of the Minnesota and United States Constitutions.

The release at issue here is not a limited one, but a broad release of all past, present, and future "liabilities of any nature whatsoever," including "statutory" liability, "for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products." The statute at issue here is not a hypothetical excise tax, but a "Health Impact Fee" that is expressly designed "to recover for the state health care costs related to or caused by tobacco use." The two could not be more in conflict.

If the State can enforce the Health Impact Fee with respect to the Settling Defendants' products, then the State's promises and releases in the Settlement Agreement would not be worth the paper on which they are written. The State would have successfully nullified the only tangible benefit provided to the Settling Defendants under the agreement -- a release from additional liability for the State's health care costs. Neither state law nor the state and federal Contracts Clauses allows such a result. The consequences of such a ruling for future potential settlements and contracts that the State seeks to enter would be dramatic.

The State makes a series of arguments in an attempt to avoid the Release. None withstands scrutiny. First, the State asserts that, despite its clear language to the contrary, the Settlement Agreement does not bar the imposition of the statutory liability imposed by the Health Impact Fee, but only "adjudicatory" liability. The State's argument ignores the plain language of the Settlement Agreement, which expressly releases "liabilities of any nature whatsoever," including "statutory" liability. The limiting word "adjudicatory" appears only in the State's briefs and nowhere in the Settlement Agreement. As a matter of ordinary contract law, the Settlement Agreement releases Settling Defendants from the statutory liability of the Health Impact Fee.

Second, the State asserts that, even if the Release applies, it must be disregarded because of the "unmistakability doctrine," separation of powers, and Article

X, Section 1 of the Minnesota Constitution. Each of these arguments is premised on the same fundamental mischaracterization of the Settlement Agreement and Settling Defendants' contentions. Settling Defendants do not contend that the Settlement Agreement "surrendered" any legislative powers, nor is that what the Settlement Agreement provides. Rather, the State agreed to release Settling Defendants from future "liabilities of any nature whatsoever," including "statutory" liability, for the recovery of health care costs attributed to their products. The State was fully within its power to provide such a release, and none of the doctrines that the State invokes bars enforcement of the Release or gives the State the prerogative to nullify its agreements. If the State were correct, a contract would never be binding on and enforceable against the State, as it could always be unilaterally revoked by a subsequent act of the Legislature. As explained below, that is not the law.

The district court correctly held that the State is bound by the terms of its Release and must fully perform its obligations under the Settlement Agreement.

ARGUMENT

I. The District Court Correctly Ruled That the Settlement Agreement Released the Settling Defendants and Their Distributors from the Liability Imposed by the Health Impact Fee.

The law treats the State in the same way it treats any other party that enters into a contract. As this Court held in Chun King Sales, Inc. v. County of St. Louis, 98 N.W.2d 194 (Minn. 1959), "when the state enters into a contract . . . its rights and liabilities are the same as a private person." Id. at 200; see United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 887 n.32 (1996) ("[T]he government is ordinarily treated just like a private party in its contractual dealings.").[6] The Settlement Agreement must therefore be interpreted according to "[t]he cardinal rule in the interpretation of contracts," which is "to ascertain the intention of the parties and to give effect to that intention if it can be done consistently with legal principles." Downing v. Indep. Sch. Dist. No. 9, 291 N.W. 613, 616 (Minn. 1940) (quotations and citations omitted).

"[T]he law presumes that parties to a release agreement intend what is expressed in a signed writing." Sorenson v. Coast-to-Coast Stores, Inc., 353 N.W.2d 666, 670 (Minn. Ct. App. 1984). Accordingly, this Court must look to the language of the Settlement Agreement to determine whether enforcement of the Health Impact Fee as to Settling Defendants' products violates that contract.

The Settlement Agreement expressly releases the precise liability that the Health Impact Fee seeks to impose. The Settlement Agreement "release[s] and forever discharge[s]" Settling Defendants from:

> [A]ny and all . . . liabilities of any nature whatsoever··· whether legal, equitable or statutory ("Claims") that the State of Minnesota . . . ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall, or may have, as follows:
>
> . . .
>
> b. for future conduct, only as to monetary Claims directly or indirectly based on, arising out of or in any way related to, in whole or in

---

[6] See also 72 Am. Jur. 2d States, Territories, and Dependencies § 70 ("A state may lay aside its sovereignty and, like a private individual or corporation, contract either with other public bodies or with private persons, and be bound as a private person would be bound under a similar contract.").

> part, the use of or exposure to Tobacco Products manufactured in the ordinary course of business, including without limitation any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products.

(App. 50-51.) (emphasis added) Yet, the Health Impact Fee seeks "to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use." (App. 33.) As the district court held, the Health Impact Fee thus "seeks to recover those costs from the settling defendants which are prohibited by the settlement agreement" (App. 12), and "directly imposes that from which the defendants are protected by the Settlement Agreement." (App. 14, 33.)

The State seeks to escape this conclusion by rewriting the contract. On fourteen occasions in its brief, the State describes the Release as limited to "adjudicatory claims." See, e.g., State's Br. at 1, 11, 13, 14, 15-17. Yet, the term "adjudicatory" is a limiting term of the State's own creation that appears nowhere in the parties' contract. The Settlement Agreement in fact says precisely the opposite, defining "claims" in the broadest possible terms to include not just judicial liability, but "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" including "statutory" liability. (App. 50-51.)

This textual expression of the broad purpose of the Release makes perfect sense given the parties' obvious intent in entering a settlement agreement that requires defendants to pay hundreds of millions of dollars per year in perpetuity. See, e.g., Kane v. Oak Grove Co., 22 N.W.2d 588, 590 (Minn. 1946) ("Words employed [in a contract] . . . are to be interpreted so as to subserve, and not subvert, the general intention of the parties."). The Settlement Agreement was clearly not a simple resolution of an individual lawsuit. If so, it would have been conditioned on a single payment. On the contrary, the Settlement Agreement was a far-reaching and forward-looking resolution of past, present and future liabilities. The parties agreed that, in exchange for the Settling Defendants' agreement to make hundreds of millions of dollars in payments annually in perpetuity, the State would release and discharge "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" -- including future "statutory" liability -- with respect to health care costs attributable to smoking. As the district court explained, "[t]he essential benefits of the settlement agreement to the defendants was that it reduced to liquidated form, those damages which the state sought to collect by its lawsuit." (App. 14.) In other words, each year's payments resolve any potential liabilities for that year's (and all prior years') tobacco-related health care costs. (App. 43-44.)

To adopt a contrary interpretation is to assume that the parties intended to give the State the unilateral and unlimited right to renege on its bargain as long as the State does so through legislation. The Settling Defendants would continue to be bound by the Agreement, would continue to pay hundreds of millions of dollars each year, and the State would continue to accept those monies, but the State could impose additional liabilities as long as it acts through the Legislature. Such a result is contrary to the clear intention of the parties as expressed in the broad release language and would render the Settling Defendants' "essential benefits" under the Settlement Agreement wholly illusory. This Court must avoid such a result. In the words of the United States Supreme Court, a contract that gives one party the power "to deny or change the effect of the promise, is an absurdity." U.S. Trust Co. of N.Y. v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1, 25 n.23 (1977); see also Cont'l Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Washington, 696 F.2d 692, 698 (9th Cir. 1983).

This Court should likewise reject the State's argument that the phrase "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" cannot apply to the Health Impact Fee because the same language appears in the release that the Settling Defendants provided to the State. See State's Br. at 20. Both Releases were written in the broadest possible terms. The purpose of the mutual releases was to bind the parties to the full extent of their respective powers. The State has the power to impose liability through legislation; the Settling Defendants do not. The fact that the State possesses greater powers to impose liabilities does not mean that the phrase should be restricted to release only some of the liabilities that the State has the power to impose. Rather, the phrase must be read in accordance with its express, unambiguous meaning and applied to each party in accordance with that party's power to seek liability.

Equally misguided is the State's attempt to limit the scope of the Release to "statutory claims" such as those for "consumer fraud, false advertising, and antitrust." State's Br. at 20. "Statutory claims" is yet another phrase that appears nowhere in the text of the Settlement Agreement. As the Release is written, the term "statutory" modifies all of the preceding terms within the definition of "claims," including "civil claims," "demands," "actions," "suits and causes of action," as well as "liabilities of any nature whatsoever." (App. 50-51.) As the district court recognized, although "statutory civil claims" certainly are covered, the Release is not limited to such claims. It expressly covers " ' . . . liabilities of any nature whatsoever' including those of a 'statutory' nature. The [Health Impact Fee] is statutory in nature" and therefore falls within the Release. (App. 14.)[7]

[7] Equally baseless is the State's attempt to limit the scope of the Release by arbitrarily carving it up into three supposed "categories" of litigation-related expenses. See State's Br. at 16. There is no indication of such a tripartite structure in the text of the Release: the State's three purported "categories" are not numbered, and there is nothing in the punctuation of the provision, such as semicolons, to suggest the grouping the State asserts. Moreover, the language of the Release is not consistent with the categories the State creates. As just one example, "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" by its very terms is much broader than simply "expenses that can result from the adjudication of claims." See, e.g., Black's Law Dictionary 914 (6th ed. 1991) (defining "liability" to include "every kind

Finally, this Court should reject the State's argument that the Release should somehow be limited because the parties used the term "legislation" elsewhere in the Settlement Agreement, but not in the Release. See State's Br. at 17-18. The plain and ordinary meaning of the term the parties did use in the release -- "statutory" -- includes legislation. See, e.g., Black's Law Dictionary (6th ed. 1991) (defining "statutory" as "relating to a statute" and defining "statute" as "[a] formal written enactment of a legislative body"). Under well-settled Minnesota law, that plain and ordinary meaning governs here. See, e.g., Turner v. Alpha Phi Sorority House, 276 N.W.2d 63, 67 (Minn. 1979) ("[T]he language found in a contract is to be given its plain and ordinary meaning."). As the district court found, the Health Impact Fee "is statutory in nature" and thus falls within the terms of the Release. (App. 14.)

The district court properly interpreted the Release in accordance with its plain language and correctly held that it releases the Settling Defendants and their distributors from the liability that the State now seeks to impose through the Health Impact Fee.

II. The District Court Correctly Held That the Health Impact Fee, if Applied to the Settling Defendants' Products, Would Violate the Contracts Clauses of the Minnesota and United States Constitutions.

Whether enacted pursuant to the taxing power, police power, or any other legislative power, the Health Impact Fee is subject to the Contracts Clauses of the Minnesota and United States Constitutions. See U.S. Const. art. I, section 10, cl. 1 ("No State shall . . . pass any . . . Law impairing the Obligations of Contracts."); Minn. Const. art. I, section 11 of legal obligation, responsibility, or duty" and "all characters of debts and obligations," including "taxes").

("No . . . law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed.").[8] As the New Hampshire Supreme Court has explained: "the State cannot resort to contract violations to solve its financial problems ···· '[T]he most basic purposes of the [contracts] clause, as well as the notions of fairness that transcend the clause itself, point to a simple constitutional principle: government must keep its word.'" Opinion of the Justices, 609 A.2d 1204, 1211 (N.H. 1992) (quoting L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 470 (1978) (emphasis in original)). The district court correctly ruled the State may not, under the Contracts Clause, enforce legislation that has the effect of undermining or avoiding its own contractual obligations:

> The state is bound, like any other party is bound, to the contracts to which it freely and knowing enters, and from which it benefits. For the state now to argue that it is not bound by its contract undermines and potentially eviscerates the constitutional provision contained in Article I, Section 11 of the Minnesota Constitution which provides that "No . . . . law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed."

(App. 14-15.)

The State does not dispute that, if this Court affirms the district court's ruling that the Release applies here, this Court should necessarily affirm the district court's ruling that application of the Health Impact Fee to the Settling Defendants' products would violate the federal and state

[8] See also Governor Tim Pawlenty's Amicus Br. ("Gov.'s Br.") at 11 ("The full and unfettered exercise of the state's police powers is tempered by the state's obligation to comply with the contracts clauses." (quotation omitted)).

Contracts Clauses. See State's Br. at 21-22. Nor could it, in view of the well-settled authority making clear that the requirements of a Contracts Clause violation are satisfied here. Only the Governor argues to the contrary. As the district court correctly ruled, the Governor's arguments are refuted by well-settled precedent, as well as common sense.[9]

To establish a Contracts Clause violation under both the Minnesota and United States Constitutions, a party must prove (1) the existence of a contract; (2) the impairment of an obligation of that contract by a state law; and (3) that the impairment is not a necessary and reasonable means to a legitimate end of protecting the vital interests of the community. See U.S. Trust Co., 431 U.S. at 25; Baltimore Teachers Union v. Mayor of Baltimore, 6 F.3d 1012, 1015 (4th Cir. 1993); Christensen v. Minneapolis Mun. Employees Ret. Bd., 331 N.W.2d 740, 750-52 (Minn. 1983); State ex rel. Hatch v. Employers Ins. of Wausau, 644 N.W.2d 820, 833 (Minn. Ct. App. 2002). Each of these elements is satisfied here:

First, the term "contract" in the Contracts Clause "is used ⋯ in its ordinary sense, as signifying the agreement of two or more minds, for considerations proceeding from one to the other, to do or not do certain acts." La. ex rel. Folsom v.

[9] As a threshold matter, this Court should not reach these Contracts Clause defenses because they are raised by the Governor, who, as a nonparty to this appeal, cannot raise issues for this Court to review. See City of Minneapolis v. Church Universal & Triumphant, 339 N.W.2d 880, 882 n.3 (Minn. 1983) (holding that amicus curiae could not raise issue on appeal that was not raised by parties to action) (citing State v. Applebaums Food Markets, Inc., 106 N.W.2d 896, 901 (Minn. 1960)); State v. Fingal, 666 N.W.2d 420, 423 n.3 (Minn. Ct. App. 2003) (same). The Governor argues other points that the State has not raised in its appeal. See, e.g., supra at 30 (Governor alone argues that the Health Impact Fee could be collected from retailers and consumers). None of these arguments is properly before this Court.

City of New Orleans, 109 U.S. 285, 288 (1883). Here, the Court found, and no one disputes, that the Settlement Agreement is a "contract" subject to the Contracts Clause. (App. 14.)

Second, the Health Impact Fee substantially impairs the contractual relationship between the State and Settling Defendants. United States Trust Co. of New York v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1 (1977), is squarely on point. There, New Jersey had repealed a statutory covenant with bondholders. While "no one c [ould] be sure precisely how much financial loss the bondholders suffered" from the covenant's repeal, the Court held that its "repeal totally eliminated an important security provision and thus impaired the obligation of the State's contract." Id. at 19. Whereas the statute in United States Trust merely affected the security provisions of a bond, here, the Health Impact Fee eliminates the essence of the parties' bargain: The only tangible benefit that the Settling Defendants received was a release of all future liabilities for reimbursement of health care costs that the State attributes to tobacco use. The Health Impact Fee therefore substantially impairs the contractual obligations of the Settlement Agreement.

Indeed, it is well-settled that a State substantially impairs its contract where, as here, it enacts legislation that nullifies the primary financial benefit that the State provided to another contracting party. For example, in Murray v. City of Charleston, 96 U.S. 432 (1877), the City of Charleston, South Carolina, had issued bonds at a fixed six percent rate of interest. When this rate later became above-market, thus making the contract no longer as beneficial to the City, the City sought to tax the bondholders on the interest collected in an amount that would reduce the effective rate of interest to four percent. The United States Supreme Court held that this attempt to nullify the contracting party's financial benefit by levying a tax was an unconstitutional impairment of contract barred by the Contracts Clause. Id. at 448. As the Court put it:

> In substance, [Charleston] say[s] to the creditor: "True, our assumption was to pay you quarterly a sum of money equal to six percent per annum on the debt we owe you. Such was our express engagement. But we now lessen our obligation. Instead of paying all the interest to you, we retain a part for ourselves [by operation of a newly enacted tax]."

Id. at 443.[10] Like the City in Murray, the State here has sought to nullify, through subsequent legislation, the financial benefit provided to the Settling Defendants. The State's Health Impact Fee thus substantially impairs the Settling Defendants' contract.

The Governor (but not the State) argues that there is no impairment because the cost of the Health Impact Fee is ultimately passed on to consumers through higher cigarette prices. See Gov.'s Br. at 17-18. But, whether the cost of the Fee is ultimately passed on by distributors to retailers and by retailers to consumers is irrelevant to determining whether the statute impairs the Settling Defendants' contract with the State. "An impairment of a public contract is substantial if it deprives a private party of an important right" or "thwarts performance of an essential term." S. Cal. Gas Co. v. City of Santa Ana, 336 F.3d 885, 890 (9th Cir. 2003); Allied Structural Steel Co. v. Spannaus, 438 U.S. 234, 246 (1978) (Minnesota statute violated contract clause by "substantially modif[ying]" a "basic term" of a contract); U.S. Trust Co. of N.Y. v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1, 19 (1977) (statute unconstitutionally impaired contract because it "totally eliminated an important security provision" of the agreement). Here, the enforcement of the Health Impact Fee deprives the Settling Defendants of the essential benefit of their bargain - the release of "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" including "statutory" with respect to health care costs associated with tobacco.

[10] The Supreme Court has continued to recognize and reaffirm Murray v. City of Charleston in recent cases. See, e.g., Winstar, 518 U.S. at 913; U.S. Trust Co., 431 U.S. at 24. A consistent result was reached by this Court in In re Hennepin Cty 1986 Recycling Bond Litig., 540 N.W.2d 494 (Minn. 1995).

Third, the Health Impact Fee is not a "necessary" and "reasonable" means to serve an important public purpose so as to justify the impairment of the Settlement Agreement. See Allied Structural Steel, 438 U.S. at 244 (an impairment is not justified, even for an important public purpose, if is it is not "reasonable" and "necessary" for that purpose). Where, as here, the State itself is a party to the contract that subsequent legislation impairs, more stringent scrutiny applies, and in such circumstances courts have almost invariably found the state's justification insufficient. See, e.g., Energy Reserves Group, Inc. v. Kan. Power & Light Co., 459 U.S. 400, 412 n.14 (1983) ("When a State itself enters into a contract, it cannot simply walk away from its financial obligations. In almost every case, the Court has held a governmental unit to its contractual obligations when it enters financial or other markets."); Allied Structural Steel, 438 U.S. at 244 n.1 5 ("[I]mpairments of a State's own contracts ⋯ face more stringent examination under the Contracts Clause than would laws regulating contractual relationships between private parties."); S. Cal. Gas, 336 F.3d at 897 ("In the last thirty-five years, no Ninth Circuit or Supreme Court case has found a statute or ordinance necessary when the law in question altered a financial term or an agreement to which a state entity was a party.").

Once again, only the Governor argues that the Health Impact Fee's impairment of the Settlement Agreement is justified, citing the Fee's purposes of "reduc [ing] tobacco use, especially by youth" and "offset[ing] . . . . the state's tobacco related medical costs." Gov.'s Br. at 12. Once again, his argument is refuted by the well-settled authority that makes clear that the impairment here is neither "reasonable" nor "necessary" to fulfill either of these purposes.

First, "an impairment is not a reasonable one if the problem sought to be resolved . . . existed at the time the contractual obligation was incurred." S. Cal. Gas Co., 336 F.3d at 895 (quotation and citation omitted); see U.S. Trust Co., 431 U.S. at 31-32 (impairment found not reasonable since the problem addressed was "not a new development," but rather was "well-known" at the time of contract). The health effects of tobacco use and attendant health care costs existed at the time of the Settlement Agreement, forming the very basis of the State's suit. (Supp. App. 110.) The Governor, himself, concedes that tobacco use, especially by youth, has been a "persistent" problem that the State has sought to address as far back as 1985. Gov.'s Br. at 18-19. The Governor therefore cannot rely on these two preexisting purposes to justify the impairment of the Settlement Agreement.

Second, even "reasonable" means to achieving an important public policy must be "necessary" to that purpose to withstand Contracts Clause scrutiny. See Allied Structural Steel, 438 U.S. at 244. Put differently, the impairment must be "essential" to the public purpose such that there are no viable "alternative means of achieving . . . [the] goals" absent impairment. U.S. Trust Co., 431 U.S. at 30. The impairment here is not "necessary" to fulfill the two purported goals. Any legislation that increases the price of tobacco would further the purpose of reducing smoking, meaning the impairment here is not "essential" to fulfilling that goal. Likewise, any legislation that raises revenue will help offset State health care costs from tobacco. In this regard, the United States Supreme Court has flatly rejected the argument that simple revenue-raising (irrespective of the money's intended use) can make an impairment necessary. "A governmental entity can always find a use for extra money . . . . If a State could reduce its financial obligations whenever it wanted to spend the money for what it regarded as an important public purpose, the Contract Clause would provide no protection at all." U.S. Trust Co., 431 U.S. at 26.

In sum, enforcement of the Health Impact Fee with respect to the Settling Defendants' products eliminates the Settling Defendants' main benefit under the contract and thus violates the Contracts Clauses of the Minnesota and United States Constitutions.[11]

III. None of the Defenses Invoked by the State - "Unmistakability," Separation of Powers, and Article X, Section 1 of the Minnesota Constitution - Applies Here or Excuses the State's Breach.

Unable to avoid the plain language of the Release, the State invokes two legal doctrines and a constitutional provision that supposedly render the Release unenforceable: the unmistakability doctrine, the separation of powers, and Article X, Section 1 of the Minnesota Constitution. While we address these arguments in detail below, the short answer to all of these arguments is that they rely on the same false premise -- that Settling Defendants claim that the State has [11] Equally meritless is the Governor's proposal that the Court rewrite the statute to require consumers and/or retailers to pay the Health Impact Fee instead of distributors. See Gov.'s Br. at 14-16. The Health Impact Fee statute expressly requires that distributors pay the fee. (App. 34.) The statute also adopts the preexisting enforcement mechanism for collecting the cigarette excise and gross receipts tax, which requires that distributors purchase and affix a stamp to each pack sold. (App. 34.) See Minn. Stat. § 297F.08(1) & (7). As the district court explained, the Health Impact Fee "is imposed upon and collected from the distributors of tobacco products. It is they who are statutorily commanded to pay the [Health Impact Fee] and their failure to do so subjects them to license revocation." (App. 13-14.) (emphasis added) Indeed, retailers and consumers would possess unstamped cigarettes only if they were to hold cigarettes that did not go through distributors at all; in the case of Settling Defendants' products, this would occur only in the case of contraband cigarettes. See Minn. Stat. § 297F.21(1); Minn. Stat. § 297F.01.

"contracted away" its power to legislate. See State's Br. at 23-26; Gov.'s Br. at 5-7. But that is not what occurred here, and it is not what the Settling Defendants claim. Rather, in return for massive payments forever, the State granted the Settling Defendants a Release from all liabilities -- past, present, and future; legal, equitable, and statutory -- that fall within the language of the Release. The State thereby assumed the risk that in the future it would not be able to impose new liabilities for the State's smoking-attributable health care costs beyond the liability created by the Settlement Agreement. Such an assumption of risk occurs whenever the State enters into a contract - the State assumes the risk that it will not be able to enforce future legislation that would undermine its prior contract. See Winstar, 518 U.S. at 881. If the law were otherwise, the State's contractual obligations could always be overridden by legislative fiat. Parties would not enter into contracts with the State if they faced such a risk of unilateral repudiation, and that would be contrary to public policy and the State's own interests.

"The state is bound, like any other party is bound, to the contracts to which it freely and knowingly enters, and from which it benefits." (App. 14.) See Chun King Sales, Inc. v. County of St. Louis, 98 N.W.2d 194, 200 (Minn. 1959) ("[W]hen the state enters into a contract··· its rights and liabilities are the same as a private person."); Winstar, 518 U.S. at 887 n.32 ("[T]he Government is ordinarily treated just like a private party in its contractual dealings."). A government cannot use its legislative power to alter, modify, obstruct, or violate a contract into which it has previously entered. See, e.g., Kimberly Assocs. v. United States, 261 F.3d 864, 870 (9th Cir. 2001) ("[T]he government in its private contracting capacity cannot exercise sovereign power for the purpose of altering, modifying, obstructing or violating the particular contracts into which it had entered with private parties." (quotation and citation omitted)); see also Grass Valley Terrace v. United States, 51 Fed. Cl. 436, 441 (2002) ("[A]lthough the act at issue may not formally target particular transactions, the government is still not relieved of its contractual obligations if 'a measure's impact nonetheless falls substantially upon the government's contracting partners.'" (quoting Winstar, 518 U.S. at 902-03)); Alaska Pulp Corp. v. United States, 48 Fed. Cl. 655, 659 (2001) ("The archetypical repudiation . . . occurs when one party to a contract attempts to unilaterally alter the contract or to condition his performance on terms that were not part of the bargain . . . . The result is no different where the government as a party to the contract commits this same sin through subsequent legislation." (citations omitted)). As we explain below, these well-settled principles defeat each of the State's proffered defenses.

A. The Unmistakability Doctrine Does Not Apply.

The State first invokes the "unmistakability doctrine," which provides that, where the government enters into a contract that purports to waive its sovereign powers, the waiver will not be enforced unless it is stated in unmistakable terms. See Winstar, 518 U.S. at 872; Kimberly Assocs., 261 F.3d at 869. But, as the district court held, the unmistakability doctrine does not apply here, because the "Settlement Agreement involves neither the eradication or usurpation of its sovereign power." (App. 11)[12] Instead, the Settlement Agreement simply grants the Settling Defendants a release from future liabilities with respect to health care costs that the State attributes to smoking. As noted above, by entering into this agreement, the State assumed the risk that future legislation would create additional "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" that would fall within the Release and thus be unenforceable as to the Settling Defendants' products.

[12] The State's argument that the district court improperly "interpreted the release as surrendering sovereign powers without applying the doctrine," State's Br. at 26 & 26 n.12 (emphasis removed), misreads the district court's opinion. The district court found that the Settlement Agreement "involves neither the eradication or usurpation of [the State's] sovereign power" and therefore the doctrine does not apply. (App. 16.)

In this respect, this case is indistinguishable from United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839. There, the United States Supreme Court refused to apply the unmistakability doctrine where the contract at issue did not purport to surrender generally the taxation power or some other sovereign power. See id. at 887. As the Court explained, "[s]o long as . . . a contract is reasonably construed to include a risk-shifting component that may be enforced without effectively barring the exercise of [the claimed sovereign] power, the enforcement of the risk allocation raises nothing for the unmistakability doctrine to guard against, and there is no reason to apply it." Id. at 880.

As in Winstar, the contract here did not require the State to surrender a sovereign power. Rather, the State granted a release to the Settling Defendants from past, present, and future liabilities for health care costs. In doing so, the State assumed the risk that it would have to forgo the enforcement of greater liabilities on the Settling Defendants that later legislative acts may otherwise have allowed. See id. at 881; Centex Corp. v. United States, 395 F.3d 1283, 1305 (Fed. Cir. 2005). The State's subsequent enactment of such legislation neither nullifies the Release nor triggers the unmistakability doctrine; it is precisely the type of future liability from which the Release was designed to protect the Settling Defendants.

Moreover, even if the unmistakability doctrine applied (which it does not), the doctrine is satisfied where, as here, there is a clear statement of the government's obligation. See Winstar, 518 U.S. at 875. The Settlement Agreement explicitly releases and discharges the Settling Defendants from "liabilities of any nature whatsoever" for health care costs allegedly related to smoking, including "statutory" liability. (App. 5152.) This clear and unmistakable agreement would satisfy the unmistakability doctrine even if it applied. See, e.g., Gen. Dynamics Corp. v. United States, 47 Fed. Cl. 514, 547 (2000).

B. Separation of Powers Principles Are Not Violated by Enforcement of the Settlement Agreement.

The State's separation of powers argument, like its unmistakability argument, is premised on the misconception that the district court's opinion found the Settlement Agreement to work some "surrender" of sovereign, legislative power. As discussed above, the district court's opinion contains no such finding. Rather, the plain language of the Settlement Agreement provides the Settling Defendants and their distributors with a release from enforcement of such a subsequent imposition of liability as to their products.

The Attorney General had authority to enter into such a release and to bind the State in all of its manifestations. As this Court explained nearly twenty years ago, "[a]s the chief law officer of the state, the attorney general possesses all of the powers inherent in that office at common law . . . . The attorney general may institute, conduct, and maintain all such actions and proceedings as he deems necessary for the enforcement of the laws of this state, the preservation of order, and the protection of legal right." Humphrey ex rel. State v. McLaren, 402 N.W.2d 535, 539 (Minn. 1987) (citation omitted). The common law authority to "conduct" and "maintain" such actions on behalf of the State as the Attorney General sees fit logically includes the authority to settle such actions on behalf of the State on terms that the Attorney General deems appropriate.

In addition to this common law authority, the Attorney General is vested with statutory authority under Minn. Stat. § 8.31 to investigate, prosecute, and settle State claims. Pursuant to this statutory directive, the Attorney General has regularly entered into court-approved settlements involving the State's complete and full release of various claims. See, e.g., In re S. Minn. Ready Mix, Inc., No. CX89 10963, 1989 WL 265297 (Minn. Dist. Ct. May 11, 1989); In re

Eschenbach Optik of Am. Inc., No. C2-92-809, 1992 WL 48976 (Minn. Dist. Ct. Jan. 22, 1992); In re Dep't 56, No. C9-92-287, 1992 WL 48974 (Minn. Dist. Ct. Jan. 9, 1992). The district court specifically relied on this statutory provision in approving the Settlement Agreement. (App. 73.)

Consistent with this broad common law and statutory authority, the Attorney General brought suit on behalf of the "State of Minnesota." The resulting Settlement Agreement and Release was entered into by the "State of Minnesota" and not just the Attorney General's Office or the Executive Branch . (App. 62.) Likewise, the Release is the "State of Minnesota's Release and Discharge," not the Attorney General's. (App. 50.) In entering into the Release, the Attorney General had the authority to bind, and did bind, the State in all of its manifestations. A contrary rule would render any settlement agreement entered into by the Attorney General on behalf of the State unenforceable and subject to unilateral nullification by the Legislature.

To the extent that any doubt remains, the Settlement Agreement itself clearly defines the "State of Minnesota" to include all members of the Executive Branch.[13] Thus, even if the Settlement Agreement did not bind the entire State (which it does), no member of the Executive Branch could enforce the Health Impact Fee without violating the agreement. The Settlement Agreement provides that the Release "shall be a complete defense to any civil action or proceeding" brought by the State that seeks to recover the State's smoking-related health care costs. (App. 52.) Any effort by the Executive [13] The Settlement Agreement defines the "State of Minnesota" to include, but not be limited to, "its past, present or future administrators, representatives, employees, officers, attorneys, agents, representatives, officials acting in their official capacities, agencies, departments, commissions, and divisions." (App. 51.) This definition encompasses every official in the Executive Branch.

Branch to enforce the Health Impact Fee against the Settling Defendants and their distributors would therefore give rise to the "complete defense" of the Release. Indeed, the State has conceded that if the Legislature were to create a new cause of action for recovery of the State's health care costs, the Release would apply to the Executive Branch's attempt to bring suit under such a provision, even though the legislation itself may be valid in all respects. See State's Mem. of Law in Opp. to Defs.' Mot. at 16. There is no difference between that situation and this case.

Finally, even if the Attorney General lacked authority to enter into the Release (which he did not), the State's separation of powers argument would fail because the Legislature acquiesced in and subsequently ratified the Settlement Agreement. (App. 12, 15.) As this Court explained in Butler v. Hatfield, 152 N.W.2d 484 (Minn. 1967), "[t]he legislature may ratify an unauthorized contract entered into by one of the state officials on its behalf even though in excess of his authority." Id. at 493; see also Yaeger v. Giguerre, 23 N.W.2d 22, 25 (Minn. 1946) ("[Wlhatever acts public officials may do or authorize to be done in the first instance may subsequently be adopted or ratified by them with the same effect as though properly done under previous authority.").

As the district court held, here the Legislature ratified the Settlement Agreement in two ways. First, the Legislature ratified the Settlement Agreement "by its conduct of actively employing settlement funds to achieve legislative purposes" over more than seven years and never once questioning its validity. (App. 12.) See, e.g., Butler, 152 N.W.2d at 496 (prior contract with an architect entered into on behalf of the State by an administrative official "was ratified and given contractual validity" when the Legislature enacted a bill appropriating funds to pay for construction of the buildings that the architect had designed); see also Hamilton v. Dillin, 88 U.S. 73, 96-97 (1874) (holding that Congress ratified President's collection of fee when it enacted legislation referring to the fee and directing that all funds arising from the fee "be paid into the treasury"). As a result, the State has ratified the Settlement Agreement and cannot now dispute that is binding and enforceable. (Id.)[14]

Second, the Legislature ratified the Settlement Agreement by passing a "fee in lieu of settlement" on nonsettling tobacco companies that specifically references and endorses the Settlement Agreement. See Minn. Stat. § 297F.24. (App. 12 n.1, 15.) In that statute, the Legislature provided that a nonsettling tobacco manufacturer could avoid a fee that would otherwise apply to its products if it "enter[ed] into an agreement with the state on similar terms" to the Settlement Agreement here. See Council of Indep. Tobacco Mfrs. of Am. v. State, 685 N.W.2d 467, 471 (Minn. Ct. App. 2004) (appeal pending).

In sum, the Attorney General clearly had the authority to enter into the Settlement Agreement and in doing so did not surrender the powers of the Legislature. Moreover, *39 any potential separation of powers argument fails in light of the Legislature's subsequent ratification of the Settlement Agreement.

C. The Settlement Agreement Does Not Surrender the Power of Taxation or Any Other Legislative Power.

As with the unmistakability doctrine and separation of powers, the State's argument based on Article X, Section 1 of the Minnesota Constitution asserts that the Settlement Agreement cannot "contract away" a Legislative power - this [14] See also City of Minneapolis v. Republic Creosoting Co., 201 N.W. 414, 418 (Minn. 1924) ("It has been repeatedly held, and we think with good reason, that when a party has accepted the benefits of a contract··· he should not be permitted to question the validity of it."); Mesaba Aviation v. County of Itasca, 258 N.W.2d 877, 880 (Minn. 1977); In re Labelle's Trust, 223 N.W.2d 400, 409 (Minn. 1974).

time, the power to tax. See State's Br. at 30-33. But once again, Settling Defendants do not contend, nor did the district court find, that the State surrendered its power to tax by entering into the Settlement Agreement. While Article X, Section 1 prevents the State from expressly contracting away its power of taxation, it does not give the State a license to void any contractual obligation it desires as long as it finds a way to do so under its "taxing" power. As this Court has recognized, there is no constitutional prohibition against the State assuming a contractual obligation that has an indirect effect on the subsequent exercise of its taxation power. See Naftalin v. King, 90 N.W.2d 185, 191 (Minn. 1958) ("Although the legislature may not surrender, suspend, or contract away the state's power of taxation . . . there is nothing in the constitution which prohibits the legislature from irrevocably binding its taxing power to provide the funds necessary to fulfill the state's contractual obligations.").

As the district court held, the Release in question here "involves neither the eradication or usurpation of its sovereign power" to tax, but instead only the State's "assent to a contract, of the nature and type, which the state enters into every day in a variety of situations." (App. 16.) At most, the Release has an indirect effect on the Legislature's subsequent exercise of its taxing power and therefore does not violate Article X, Section 1. That fact distinguishes this case from Anderson v. State, 435 N.W.2d 74 (Minn. Ct. App. 1989). See State's Br. at 32-33. A contrary interpretation would result in the State being unable to enter into any binding financial contract because the Legislature would always have the unilateral power to nullify its terms through the taxing power.

Regardless, the Minnesota Constitution's restriction on contracting away the power to tax is wholly inapplicable here for another reason as well: the Health Impact Fee is in fact a "fee" and not a "tax." As the district court found, "[t]he totality of all circumstances, . . . as well as the statutorily expressed purpose, all require the conclusion that the [Health Impact Fee] is a fee." (App. 15.)

In determining whether an enactment is a tax or a fee, a court must look at the statutory language, purpose, and administration. See, e.g., Country Joe, Inc. v City of Eagan, 560 N.W.2d 681, 686 (Minn. 1997) (noting purpose and administration of statutory exaction in determining whether it was tax or fee); S.C. ex rel. Tindal v. Block, 717 F.2d 874, 887 (4th Cir. 1983) (determining that a statute is a fee as opposed to a tax because "[t]he clear language and structure of the 1982 amendment indicates that its primary purpose is regulation"). Here, (1) the statutory purpose behind the Health Impact Fee, (2) the way it is structured and administered, (3) the rights it implicates, and (4) the choice of the Legislature and Executive to label it a fee all demonstrate that the Health Impact Fee is a fee and not a tax.

First, the stated statutory purpose of the Health Impact Fee demonstrates that it is a fee. The district court correctly held that "the key to determining whether or not a particular item is a fee or a tax is whether or not it has a direct relationship to the costs which the reimbursement [fee] seeks" to recoup. (App. 15.) See Country Joe, 560 N.W.2d at 685; accord, e.g., Okeson v. City of Seattle, 78 P.3d 1279, 1286 (Wash. 2003) ("[A] regulatory fee raises money . . . to pay for or regulate the burden those who pay have created." (emphasis added)). Here, the stated purpose of the Health Impact Fee was to reimburse the State for specific health care costs caused by or associated with tobacco use. (App. 33.) Indeed, the amount of the fee "was arrived at based on the impact of tobacco use o[n] the state's public funded health programs, such as Medical Assistance, GAMC and Minnesota Care." (Supp. App. 167.) As the district court concluded, "the purpose of the legislation was to seek governmental reimbursement for the costs associated with tobacco which distinguishes the [Health Impact Fee] from a tax and makes it a fee." (App. 15.)[15]

The fact that the Health Impact Fee was enacted to reimburse the State for tobacco-related expenses and not simply to raise revenue is underscored by the statute in which it was passed. The Health Impact Fee was included within the "Omnibus Health and Human Services Bill" - a bill dedicated solely to health care. See generally 2005 Minn. H.F. 139. Tellingly, the Legislature simultaneously enacted a separate "Omnibus Tax Bill" that was dedicated solely to taxes. See 2005 Minn. H.F. 138. If the Health Impact Fee were, in fact, a tax, its inclusion in a health care bill and not in a simultaneously passed tax bill would run afoul of Minnesota's constitutional single subject requirement. See Minn. Const. art. IV, section 17 ("[n]o law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title."). The district court correctly interpreted the statute in a manner that avoided conflict with the Constitution. In re Risk Level Determination of CM., 578 N.W.2d 391, 396 (Minn. Ct. App. 1998) (A court is obligated to adopt interpretation of statute that "stands in harmony with the Constitution, even if the alternative [15] Instead of addressing the purpose of the Health Impact Fee, the State argues that simply because the Health Impact Fee raises revenue, it must be a tax. See State's Br. at 36-44. But both fees and taxes raise revenue; as explained above, the pertinent question is whether the revenue is used for the general welfare of the public or for some specific purpose. See Country Joe, Inc., 560 N.W.2d at 686 (in holding that exaction was not a fee, court stated "we find it significant that revenues collected from the road unit connection charge are not earmarked in any way to fund projects necessitated by new development"); Farmers Ins. Group v. Comm'r of Taxation, 153 N.W.2d 236, 240 (Minn. 1967); Tindal, 717 F.2d at 887; Okeson, 78 P.3d at 1286 ("It is a misnomer to simply ask whether the charges raise revenue, because both taxes and regulatory fees raise revenue.").

Second, the Health Impact Fee is structured and administered as a fee. Courts have found the creation of a special fund significant in determining that an exaction is a fee rather than a tax. See, e.g., San Juan Cellular Tel. Co. v. Pub. Servs. Comm'n, 967 F.2d 683, 685 (1st Cir. 1992) (noting that one feature of a fee, unlike a tax, is that it is placed into a special fund to defray costs). In fact, in Country Joe, Inc. v. City of Eagan, 560 N.W.2d 681, this Court, in determining that an exaction was a tax rather than a fee, stated "we find it significant that revenues collected from the road unit connection charge are not earmarked in any way to fund projects necessitated by new development, but instead fund all major street construction, as well as repairs of existing streets." Id. at 686.

Here, money generated by the Health Impact Fee does not go to the general Treasury, but instead goes into a special fund called the "Health Impact Fund" for use in reimbursing the State for costs associated with tobacco use. (App. 33.) As the district court described, "the Human Services Commissioner must annually certify to the Finance Commissioner the '. . . tobacco use attributable costs.' Upon receipt of that certification, the Finance Commissioner is then mandated to transfer from the [Health Impact Fee] fund to the general fund an amount sufficient to offset the certified expenditures." (App. 13 (quoting App. 33).) In other words, the Health Impact Fee must be used to cover the health care costs that the State believes it has incurred in a given year as a result of tobacco use. This is the very essence of a fee. Country Joe, 560 N.W.2d at 686. As the district court concluded, "[t]he mechanism by which the funds are collected by the $.75 [Health Impact Fee] also militate[s] against finding that it is a tax, rather than a fee." (App. 13.)

point. There, the court concluded that a statute was a fee when (1) the money was used to defray expenses generated by the industry against which the fee was levied, (2) a regulatory agency assessed the fee, and (3) the fee was deposited into a special fund. Id. at 686. As in San Juan, the State here enacted the Health Impact Fee to defray its health care costs attributable to smoking and to discourage the use of tobacco, required a regulatory agency to assess such costs, and deposited the monies in a special fund. As a regulatory measure enacted for a specified purpose, the Health Impact Fee is a fee and not a tax. See also State v. Hovorka, 110 N.W. 870 (Minn. 1907); Ramaley v. City of St. Paul, 33 N.W.2d 19, 22 (Minn. 1948).

The State relies on the Washington Supreme Court's decision in Okeson v. City of Seattle, 78 P.3d 1279, for the proposition that the segregation of revenue in a separate fund does not make an enactment a fee. Although in that case there was a special fund, there was no regulatory purpose for the exaction, which was instead a general revenue raising mechanism. Id. at 1286-87. Accordingly, the court noted that the creation of a fund weighed in favor of the finding of the law to be a fee but did not mandate such a finding. Id. Other factors militated in favor of characterizing the exaction a tax. Here, however, the Health Impact Fee not only goes into a separate fund, but also serves the express regulatory purpose of requiring an industry to reimburse the State for the alleged burden (health care expenses) created by that industry. See, e.g., San Juan Cellular Tel. Co., 967 F.2d at 685. Indeed, the Okeson court specifically recognized that a regulatory fee is one that "raises money to ⋯ pay for or regulate the burden those who pay have created." Id. at 1286. Okeson thus supports, rather than undercuts, the argument that the Heath Impact Fee is a "fee" and not a "tax."

Third, the Health Impact Fee implicates the "right or privilege to engage" in the business of tobacco-product distribution, and is therefore a fee. See State's Br. at 36 (quoting Ramaley v. St. Paul, 33 N.W.2d 19, 21-22 (Minn.

1948)). Distributors must pay the fee in order to receive stamps, which must be affixed to tobacco products prior to sale. (App. 33.) (adopting the enforcement mechanism of chapters 270C and 297F) As the State admits, failing to affix the stamps prior to sale can result in the revocation of the distributor's license to sell tobacco products in the State. See State's Br. at 38, 39 n.23; App. 34; Minn. Stat. § 297F.03(1) & (7); see also Gov.'s Br. at 19. These provisions make clear that the Health Impact Fee implicates "the licensing or regulation of the [cigarette] business," such that it is a fee. Ramaley, 33 N.W.2d at 21.

Finally, it bears emphasizing that the legislation specifically labels the Health Impact Fee as a fee. (App. 33.) When proposing the Health Impact Fee, to demonstrate that it was legally a "fee" and not a "tax," the Governor released a publication of the Minnesota Department of Revenue entitled "Use of Fees vs. Taxes." (Supp. App. 171.) In this publication, the Department of Revenue distinguished the features of fees from those of taxes, specifically noting that a fee "approximate[s] the costs incurred by, or imposed on, government" by an industry. (Id.) After debate and due consideration, the Legislature agreed, passing the Health Impact Fee as a "fee." (App. 33.) That legislative determination likewise makes clear that the Health Impact Fee is a fee and not a tax and that, therefore, Article X, Section I would not apply here even if the Settlement Agreement purported to surrender the State's taxation power (which it does not).

DEFENDANTS' AND DEFENDANTS' DISTRIBUTORS' NOTICE OF MOTION AND MOTION FOR ENFORCEMENT OF SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on September ____, 2005, ___:00 __.m., before the Honorable Michael F. Fetsch, at the Ramsey County District Court, Philip Morris USA, R.J.

Reynolds Tobacco Company ("RJRT"), and Lorillard Tobacco Company ("Lorillard") (collectively referred to as the "Settling Defendants") and the distributors of Settling Defendants' products, A.H. Hermel, Candy & Tobacco Co.; Henry's Foods, Inc.; Sandstrom's, Inc.; Johnson Candy and Tobacco Company of Brainerd, Inc.; M. Amundson Cigar & Candy Company, LLP; The Watson Companies, Inc.; Granite City Jobbing Company, Inc.; Minter-Weisman Co., and Segal Wholesale, Inc. ("Distributors") will bring a motion for an order enforcing the Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment executed with the State of Minnesota entered in this action and approved by this Court on May 8, 1998. In support of this Motion, the Settling Defendants and their Distributors state as follows:

1. On May 8, 1998, the Settling Defendants entered into a Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment (the "Settlement Agreement") with the State of Minnesota to resolve litigation brought against the Settling Defendants and other tobacco product manufacturers by the State and to resolve any past, current, or future claims the State may have for recovery of health care costs allegedly attributable to tobacco use or exposure. On May 8, 1998, this Court signed a Consent Judgment approving the Settlement Agreement, and on May 19, 1998, the Court Administrator entered judgment.

2. The Settlement Agreement obligates the State to > release and forever discharge all Defendants and their . . . distributors . . . from any and all liabilities whatsoever . . . whether legal, equitable or statutory ("Claims") that the State of Minnesota . . . ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall, or may have, as follows:

> b. for future conduct, only as to monetary Claims directly or indirectly based on, arising out of or in any way related to, in whole or in part, the use of or exposure to Tobacco Products manufactured in the ordinary course of business, including without limitation any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products.

Settlement Agreement § III.B (the "Release Provision").

3. The Settlement Agreement further obligates the State "to support the integrity and enforcement of the terms of this Settlement Agreement." Settlement Agreement § V.I (the "Express Warranty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing").

4. In signing the Settlement Agreement, the State agreed that the Settlement Agreement "shall constitute a valid and binding contractual obligation, enforceable in accordance with its terms." Settlement Agreement § V.A. The Settlement Agreement requires that "any disputes under this Settlement Agreement, including without limitation any claims for breach or enforcement of this Settlement Agreement, [must be presented] exclusively to [the District Court of Ramsey County, Second Judicial District]," which "retain[s] jurisdiction for the purposes of implementing and enforcing this Settlement Agreement." Settlement Agreement § I.A.

5. Effective August 1, 2005, the State imposed a "Tobacco Health Impact Fee" (the "HIF") on "cigarette distributors and tobacco products distributors to recover for the state health costs related to or caused by tobacco use." See Minn. H.F. 139 (2005 Special Sess.), Art. 4 § 2(1). The statute contains no exemptions for products manufactured by the Settling Defendants.

6. The imposition of the HIF on the Settling Defendants' products would violate material terms of the Settlement Agreement, including its Release Provision and its Express Warranty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing. By impairing the State's obligations under the Settlement Agreement, imposition of the HIF would also violate the Contracts Clauses of the Minnesota and United States Constitutions. Minn. Constit. Art. I, § 11 ("[n]o law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed.") & U.S. Constit. Art. I, § 10, cl. 1 ("No State shall . . . pass any . . . Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts.").

7. Due to the State's imminent enforcement of the HIF, the statute's clear violation of the terms of the Settlement Agreement, and the importance of the Constitutional issues raised herein, Settling Defendants and their Distributors respectfully request that the Court consider this motion on an expedited basis, that a hearing be scheduled promptly, and that there be no continuations or delays prior to a prompt ruling on the Motion.

8. For these reasons and for those stated in the accompanying Memorandum of Law, the Settling Defendants and their Distributors move this Court for an Order declaring that the release is applicable to the HIF and serves as a complete bar and defense to any attempt by the State to collect the HIF with respect to Settling Defendants' products. In the alternative, the Settling Defendants and their Distributors move this Court for an Order declaring that the State has breached the Settlement Agreement and ordering compliance with the agreement; and declaring that the HIF violates the Contracts Clauses of the United States and Minnesota Constitutions.

9. This Motion is based upon the Memorandum of Law in Support of Defendants' and Defendants' Distributors' Motion for Enforcement of Settlement Agreement, the Affidavit of Edward Magarian and attached exhibits, the proposed order, and all the files and pleadings herein.

Dated: August 26, 2005

Civil Case No. C1-94-8565

May 8, 1998

SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT AND STIPULATION FOR ENTRY OF CONSENT JUDGMENT

THIS SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT AND RELEASE ("Settlement Agreement") is made as of the date hereof, by and among the parties hereto, as indicated by their signatures below, to settle and resolve with finality all claims of the State of Minnesota relating to the subject matter of this action which have been or could have been asserted by the State of Minnesota.

WHEREAS, the State of Minnesota, through its Attorney General Hubert H. Humphrey III, and Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Minnesota, commenced this action on August 17, 1994, asserting various claims for monetary, equitable and injunctive relief on behalf of the State of Minnesota and Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Minnesota against certain tobacco manufacturers and others as Defendants;

WHEREAS, the Defendants have denied each and every one of Plaintiffs' allegations of unlawful conduct or wrongdoing and have asserted a number of defenses to Plaintiffs' claims, which defenses have been contested by Plaintiffs;

WHEREAS, the parties hereto wish to avoid the further expense, delay, inconvenience, burden and uncertainty of continued litigation of this matter (including appeals from any verdict), the State of Minnesota and the Settling Defendants have agreed to settle this litigation pursuant to terms which will achieve for the State of Minnesota (and thus for the people of the State of Minnesota) significant funding for the advancement of public health, the implementation of important tobacco-related public health measures in Minnesota, as well as funding for national research dedicated to studying and significantly reducing the use of Tobacco Products by youth;

WHEREAS, the State of Minnesota and Settling Defendants have agreed to settle this lawsuit on terms set forth in this Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment and the attached Consent Judgment;

WHEREAS, the parties have further greed to jointly petition the Court for approval of the Consent Judgment, on the grounds that settlement would be in the public interest;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT KNOWN THAT, in consideration of the payments to be made by the Settling Defendants, the dismissal and release of claims by the State of Minnesota and such other consideration as described herein, the sufficiency of which is hereby acknowledged, the parties hereto, acting by and through their authorized agents, memorialize and agree as follows:

I. GENERAL PROVISIONS

The parties hereto agree to present any disputes under this Settlement Agreement, including without limitation any claims for breach or enforcement of this Settlement Agreement, exclusively to this Court. Settling Defendants and their assigns, affiliates, agents, and successors hereby waive any right to challenge this Agreement or the Consent Judgment, directly or through third parties, on the ground that is made in settlement of an actual or potential liability for a fine, penalty (civil or criminal) or enhanced damages.

B. Settlement Payments to the State of Minnesota.

Each Settling Defendant severally shall cause to be paid to an account designated in writing by the State of Minnesota in accordance with and subject to paragraph II.E. of this Settlement Agreement, the following amounts: the amount listed for it in Schedule A hereto, such amount representing its share of $240,000,000, to be paid on or before September 5, 1998; pro rata in proportion to its Market Share, its share of $220,800,000, to be paid on or before January 4, 1999; pro rata in proportion to its Market Share, its share of $242,550,000, to be paid on or before January 3, 2000; pro rata in proportion to its Market Share, its share of $242,550,000, to be paid on or before January 2, 2001; pro rata in proportion to its Market Share, its share of $242,550,000, to be paid on or before January 2, 2002; and pro rata in proportion to its Market Share, its share of $121,550,000, to be paid on or before January 2, 2003. The payments made by the Settling Defendants pursuant to this Paragraph shall be adjusted upward by the greater of 3% or the Consumer Price Index applied each year on the previous year, beginning with the payment due to be made on or before January 3, 2000. The payments due to be made by the Settling Defendants pursuant to this Paragraph on or before January 3, 2000, on or before January 2, 2001, on or before January 2, 2002, and on or before January 2, 2003, will also be decreased or increased, as the case may be, in accordance with the formula for adjustments of payments as set forth in Appendix A. The payments due to be made by the Settling Defendants pursuant to this Paragraph on or before September 5, 1998, and on or before January 4, 1999, shall not be subject to inflation escalation and volume adjustments described in the preceding sentences.

In the event that any of the Settling Defendants fails to make any payment required of it pursuant to this Paragraph (a "Defaulting Defendant") by the applicable date set forth in this paragraph II.B. (a "Missed Payment"), the State of Minnesota shall provide notice to each of the Settling Defendants of such non-payment. The Defaulting Defendant shall have 15 days after receipt of such notice to pay the Missed Payment, together with interest accrued from the original applicable due date at the prime rate as published in the Wall Street Journal on the latest publication date on or before the date of default plus 3%. If the Defaulting Defendant does not make such payment within such 15-day period, the State of Minnesota shall provide notice to each of the Settling Defendants of such continued non-payment. Any or all of the Settling Defendants (other than the Defaulting Defendant) shall thereafter have 15 days after receipt of such notice to elect (in such Settling Defendant's or such Settling Defendants' sole and absolute discretion) to pay the Missed Payment, together with interest accrued from the original applicable due date at the prime rate as published in the Wall Street Journal on the latest publication date on or before the date of default plus 3%. In the event that the State of Minnesota does not receive the Missed Payment, together with such accrued interest, within such additional 15-day period, all payments required to be made by each of the respective Settling Defendants pursuant to this Paragraph shall at the end of such additional 15-day period be accelerated and shall immediately become due and owing to the State of Minnesota from each Settling Defendant pro rata in proportion to its Market Share; provided, however, that any such accelerated payments (a) shall all be adjusted upward by the greater of (i) the rate of 3% per annum or (ii) the actual total percent change in the CPI, in either instance for the period between January 1 of the year in which the acceleration of payments pursuant to this Paragraph occurs and the date on which such accelerated payments are due pursuant to this subsection, and (b) shall all immediately be adjusted in accordance with the formula for adjustments of payments set forth in Appendix A.

Nothing in this Paragraph shall be deemed under any circumstance to create any obligation on the part of any Settling Defendant to pay any amount owed or payable to the State of Minnesota by any other Settling Defendant. All obligations of the Settling Defendants pursuant to this Paragraph are intended to be and shall remain several, and not joint.

C. Public Health Foundation.

The Attorney General will propose, and the Settling Defendants have agreed not to oppose, that the Legislature appropriate to a foundation one-half the payments due in September 1998, and in January of the years 1999 through 2003, to be used for such activities as the directors of the foundation may determine will diminish the human and economic consequences of tobacco use. It is contemplated that the directors of the foundation will include public representatives, and representatives of such groups as the American Lung Association, Minnesota Chapter; the University of Minnesota School of Public Health; the Minnesota SmokeFree 2000 Coalition; the American Cancer Society, Minnesota Division; the American Heart Association, Minnesota Chapter; the Association for Non-Smokers' Rights--Minnesota; and the Mayo Clinic Nicotine Dependence Center.

D. Annual Payments.

Each of the Settling Defendants agrees that, beginning on December 31, 1998, and annually thereafter on December 31st of each year after 1998 (subject to final adjustment within 30 days), it shall severally cause to be paid to an account designated in writing by the State of Minnesota in accordance with and subject to paragraph II.E. of this Settlement Agreement, pro rata in proportion to its respective Market Share, its share of 2.55% of the following amounts (in billions):

Year	11998	11999	22000	22001	22002	22003	There-after
	1	2	3	4	5	6
Amount	$4B	$4.5B	$5B	$6.5B	$6.5B	$8B	$8B

The payments made by Settling Defendants pursuant to this Paragraph shall be adjusted upward by the greater of 3% or the Consumer Price Index applied each year on the previous year, beginning with the annual payment due on December 31, 1999. Such payments will also be decreased or increased, as the case may be, beginning with the annual payment due on December 31, 1999, in accordance with the formula for adjustments of payments set forth in Appendix A.

E. Payment of Settlement Proceeds.

Any payment made pursuant to this Settlement Agreement shall be made to an account designated in writing by the State of Minnesota or the Court, as applicable; provided that after Final Approval, if the Court's approval is challenged by any third party, payments due to be made shall be paid into a special escrow account (the "State Escrow Account"), and held in escrow pursuant to this Section V.B. and the State Escrow Agreement.

F. Adjustments in Event of Federal Legislation.

The enactment of federal tobacco- related legislation shall not affect the payments required by this Agreement except as follows:

1. If federal tobacco-related legislation providing for the resolution or other disposition of State Attorney General actions brought against tobacco companies is enacted on or before November 30, 2000, and if such legislation provides for payment(s) by tobacco companies (whether by settlement payment, tax or any other means), all or part of which is made available to States, the State of Minnesota shall elect to receive any funds that are (i) unrestricted as to their use, or (ii) are restricted to any form of health care or to any use related to tobacco (collectively "Federal Settlement Funds"), and Settling Defendants shall receive a dollar-for-dollar offset up to the full amount of payments required under Section II.D of this Agreement for any and all Settlement Funds received by the State of Minnesota, until all Federal Settlement Funds provided however:

a. There shall be no offset to payments required by this Agreement on account of any federal program, subsidies, payments, credits or other aid to the State which are not conditioned or tied to the settlement of a state tobacco-related suit or the relinquishment of state tobacco-related claims;

b. The State relinquishes no rights or benefits under this Agreement except for payments subject to the offset;

c. There are no federally imposed preconditions to the receipt of Federal Settlement Funds other than

(i) the settlement of any state tobacco-related lawsuit or the relinquishment of state tobacco-related claims,

(ii) actions or expenditures related to tobacco, including but not limited to, education, cessation, control or enforcement, or

(iii) actions or expenditures related to health care;

d. If Settling Defendants enter into any pre-verdict settlement agreement (subsequent to the date of this Agreement) of similar litigation brought by a non-federal governmental plaintiff which does not require such an offset, this Section is null and void;

e. If Settling Defendants enter into any pre-verdict settlement agreement (subsequent to the date of this Agreement) of similar litigation brought by a non- federal governmental plaintiff which has an offset term more favorable to the plaintiff, this Settlement Agreement shall, at the option of the Office of the Attorney General of the State of Minnesota, be revised to include a comparable term.

2. Nothing in this section is intended to or shall reduce the total amounts payable to the State under this Agreement by Settling Defendants beyond the amount of Federal Settlement Funds actually received by the State of Minnesota.

III. DISMISSAL OF CLAIMS AND RELEASES

A. State of Minnesota's Dismissal of Claims.

Upon approval of this Settlement Agreement by the Court, the Court shall enter a Final Judgment dismissing with prejudice all claims as to all Defendants.

This Agreement resolves all claims between the State and the Defendants, except for issues pending before the court pertaining to the discoverability or production of documents for which the Defendants reserve their rights of appeal.

B. State of Minnesota's Release and Discharge.

Upon Final Approval, the State of Minnesota shall release and forever discharge all Defendants and their present and former parents, subsidiaries (whether or not wholly owned) and affiliates, and their respective divisions, organizational units, officers, directors, employees, representatives, insurers, suppliers, agents, attorneys and distributors (and the predecessors, heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of each of the foregoing) from any and all manner of civil claims, demands, actions, suits and causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including civil penalties, as well as costs, expenses and attorneys' fees, known or unknown, suspected or unsuspected, accrued or unaccrued, whether legal, equitable or statutory ("Claims") that the State of Minnesota (including any of its past, present or future administrators, representatives, employees, officers, attorneys, agents, representatives, officials acting in their official capacities, agencies, departments, commissions, and divisions, and whether or not any such person or entity participates in the settlement), whether directly, indirectly, representatively, derivatively or in any other capacity, ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall or may have, as follows:

a. for past conduct, as to any Claims relating to the subject matter of this action which have been asserted or could be asserted now or in the future in this action or a comparable Federal action by the State; and

b. for future conduct, only as to monetary Claims directly or indirectly based on, arising out of or in any way related to, in whole or in part, the use of or exposure to Tobacco Products manufactured in the ordinary course of business, including without limitation any future claims for reimbursement for health care costs allegedly associated with use of or exposure to Tobacco Products;

(such past and future Claims hereinafter referred to as the "Released Claims"); provided, however, that the foregoing shall not operate as a release of any person, party or entity (whether or not a signatory to this Agreement) as to any of the obligations undertaken in this Agreement in connection with a monetary breach or default of this Agreement.

The State of Minnesota hereby covenants and agrees that it shall not hereafter sue or seek to establish civil liability against any person or entity covered by the release provided under Paragraph III.B based, in whole or in part, upon any of the Released Claims, and the State of Minnesota agrees that this covenant and agreement shall be a complete defense to any such civil action or proceeding.

C. Settling Defendants' Release and Discharge.

Upon Final Approval, Settling Defendants shall release and forever discharge the State of Minnesota (including any of its past, present or future administrators, representatives, employees, officers, attorneys, agents, representatives, officials acting in their official capacities, agencies, departments, commissions, and divisions, and whether or not any such person or entity participates in the settlement) from any and all manner of civil claims, demands, actions, suits and causes of action, damages whenever incurred, liabilities of any nature whatsoever, including costs, expenses, penalties and attorneys' fees, known or unknown, suspected or unsuspected, accrued or unaccrued, whether legal, equitable or statutory, arising out of or in any way related to, in whole or in part, the subject matter of the litigation of this lawsuit, that Settling Defendants (including any of their present and former parents, subsidiaries, divisions, affiliates, officers, directors, employees, witnesses (fact or expert), representatives, insurers, agents, attorneys and distributors and the predecessors, heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of each of the foregoing, and whether or not any such person participates in the settlement), whether directly, indirectly, representatively, derivatively or in any other capacity, ever had, now has or hereafter can, shall or may have.

D. Limited Most-Favored Nation Provision.

In partial consideration for the monetary payments to be made by the Settling Defendants pursuant to this Settlement Agreement, the State of Minnesota agrees that if the Settling Defendants enter into any future pre-verdict settlement agreement of other similar litigation brought by a non-federal governmental plaintiff on terms more favorable to such non-federal governmental plaintiff than the terms of this Settlement Agreement (after due consideration of relevant differences in population or other appropriate factors), the terms of this Settlement Agreement shall not be revised except as follows: to the extent, if any, such other pre-verdict settlement agreement includes terms that provide

(a) for joint and several liability among the Settling Defendants with respect to monetary payments to be made pursuant to such agreement;

(b) a guarantee by the parent company of any of the Settling Defendants or other assurances of payment or creditors' remedies with respect to monetary payments to be made pursuant to such agreement; or

(c) for the implementation of non-economic tobacco-related public health measures different from those contained in this Settlement Agreement, then this Settlement Agreement shall, at the option of the Office of the Attorney General of the State of Minnesota, be revised to include terms comparable to such terms.

IV. DEFENDANTS' ASSURANCES

Settling Defendants agree not to directly or indirectly, including through any third party or affiliate:

1. Oppose the passage of those future Minnesota legislative proposals or administrative rules intended by their terms to reduce tobacco use by children listed on Schedule B. (The foregoing does not prohibit Settling Defendants from resisting enforcement of, or suing for declaratory or injunctive relief with respect to any such legislation or rule on any grounds.)

2. Facially challenge the enforceability or constitutionality of existing Minnesota laws or rules relating to tobacco control, including, but not limited to, Minnesota Statutes Section 461.17 regarding the disclosure of certain ingredients in cigarettes; Minnesota Statutes Sections 461.12, et. seq., and 609.685 regarding the sale of tobacco to minors; Minnesota Statutes Section 325F.77 regarding the distribution of samples; and Minnesota Statutes Section 144.411 et. seq. regarding clean indoor air.

3. Support in Congress or any forum, legislation, rules or policies which would preempt, override, or abrogate or diminish the State's rights or recoveries under this Agreement. Except as specifically provided in the foregoing sentence, nothing in this Agreement shall be deemed to restrain the parties from advocating terms of any national settlement or taking any other positions on issues relating to tobacco. The State and its attorneys specifically reserve the right to continue to litigate or advocate for additional document disclosure beyond that ordered by the Ramsey County District Court, in any forum outside of Minnesota.

4. Settling Defendants' obligation to produce documents in discovery pertaining to enactment or repeal of, or opposition to, state legislation or state executive action relating to tobacco in Minnesota is extended beyond August 17, 1994, to the date of this Agreement, with Settling Defendants required to produce these documents within thirty (30) days of the date of this Agreement.

B. Disclosure of Payments Likely to Affect Public Policy.

1. Each Settling Defendant shall disclose to the Office of the Attorney General and the Office of the Governor, at the times and in the manner provided below, information about the following payments:

a. Any payment to a "lobbyist" or "principal" within the meaning of Minnesota Statutes, Section 10A.01, subdivisions 11 and 28, if Settling Defendant knows or has reason to know that the payment will be used, directly or indirectly, to influence legislative or administrative action, or the official action of state or local government in Minnesota in any way relating to Tobacco Products or their use.

b. Any payment to a third party, if the Settling Defendant knows the payment is partly in consideration for the third party attending, offering testimony at, or participating before a state or local government hearing in Minnesota in any way relating to Tobacco Products or their use; and

c. Any payment (other than a "political contribution" under Minn. Stat. § 10.01, subd. 7, or 2 USC § 431(8)(A)) to, or for the benefit of, a state or local official in Minnesota, whether made directly by a defendant or indirectly through an employee acting in the scope of his employment, affiliate, lobbyist, or other agent acting under the substantial control of a defendant.

2. Disclosures required under this section shall be filed with the Office of the Attorney General and with the Office of the Governor on the first day of January, April, July and October of each year for any and all payments made through the first day of the previous month and shall be transmitted in electronic format or such format as the attorney general may require, with the following information:

a. The name, address, telephone number and e-mail address of the recipient.

b. The amount of each payment described in Paragraph B(1).

c. The aggregate amount of all payments described in Paragraph B(1) to the recipient in the calendar year.

3. Information filed under this section is "public data" within the meaning of the Minnesota Government Data Practices Act.

C. Settling Defendants agree to discontinue all Billboards and Transit Advertisements of Tobacco Products in the State. Settling Defendants shall use their best efforts in cooperation with the State to identify all such Billboards that are located within 1000 feet of any public or private school or playground in the State, and shall provide the State with a preliminary list of the location of all Billboards and stationary Transit Advertisements within 30 days from the date hereof, such list to be finalized within an additional 15 days. Settling Defendants shall, at the earlier of the expiration of applicable contracts or four months from the date the final list is supplied to the State, remove all Billboards and Transit Advertisements for Tobacco Products from within the State, leaving the space unused or used for advertising unrelated to Tobacco Products; or at the option of the State of Minnesota, will allow the State, at its expense, to substitute for the remaining term of the contract, alternative advertising intended to discourage the use of Tobacco Products by children and their exposure to second-hand smoke. The parties also agree to secure the expedited removal of up to 50 Billboards or stationary Transit Advertisements for Tobacco Products designated by the State within 30 days after their designation. Each Settling Defendant which has Billboard advertising in the State shall provide the Court and the Attorney General, or his designee, with the name of a contact person to whom the State may direct inquiries during the time such Billboards and Transit Advertisements are being eliminated, from whom the State may obtain periodic reports as to the progress of their elimination and who will be responsible for ensuring that appropriate action is taken to remove any Billboards that have not been timely eliminated.

D. Settling Defendants shall not make, in the connection with any motion picture made in the United States, or cause to be made any payment, direct or indirect, to any person to use, display, make reference to, or use as a prop any cigarette, cigarette package, advertisement for cigarettes, or any other item bearing the brand name, logo, symbol, motto, selling message, recognizable color or pattern of colors, or any other indicia of product identification identical or similar to, or identifiable with, those used for any brand of domestic tobacco products.

E. On and after December 31, 1998, Settling Defendants shall permanently cease marketing, licensing, distributing, selling or offering, directly or indirectly, including by catalogue or direct mail, in the State of Minnesota, any service or item (other than tobacco products or any item of which the sole function is to advertise tobacco products) which bears the brand name (alone or in conjunction with any other word), logo, symbol, motto, selling message, recognizable color or pattern of colors, or any other indicia of product identification identical or similar to, or identifiable with, those used for any brand of domestic tobacco products.

F. Settling Defendants and the Law Firm of Robins, Kaplan, Miller & Ciresi L.L.P. ("RKM&C") have reached a separate agreement for the payment of the State's costs and attorneys fees. In consideration for said agreement, RKM&C has released the State from its obligation to pay costs and attorneys fees under the Special Attorney Appointment dated May 23, 1994.

V. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

A. Representations of Parties.

The respective parties hereto hereby represent that this Settlement Agreement has been duly authorized and, upon execution, will constitute a valid and binding contractual obligation, enforceable in accordance with its terms, of each of the parties hereto. The State represents that all of its outside counsel that have represented it in this action are, by and through their authorized representatives, signators to this Settlement Agreement.

B. Court Approval.

The Parties agree to submit this Settlement Agreement to the Court for its review and approval on Friday, May 8, 1998. If the Court declines to approve this Settlement Agreement, the Blue Cross Settlement Agreement, the form of State Escrow Agreement, and the form of Blue Cross Escrow Agreement, the matter will be immediately submitted to the jury. If the Court, as a condition of approval or otherwise, requires any change in the Agreements which any signatory is unwilling to make, the case will be immediately submitted to the jury. If before the Court approves the Agreements, any third-party seeks to intervene for the purpose of opposing the Settlement Agreement, the Blue Cross Settlement Agreement, the State Escrow Agreement, and the Blue Cross Escrow Agreement, any Party at its sole election, may withdraw from this Agreement, after first giving notice to the Court and all of the Parties before the jury is dismissed, and submit the case to the jury. If the Court approves the Settlement Agreement as submitted, the Agreement will be final and binding upon all Parties.

In the event that there is a challenge to any provision of this Settlement Agreement by anyone other than the Attorney General of the State of Minnesota as of the date of this Agreement, BCBS or Settling Defendants ("a third-party challenge@) after Final Approval, any amounts required to be paid by Settling Defendants pursuant to this Settlement Agreement shall be paid into escrow pursuant to the State Escrow Agreement. If, as a result of such a challenge, any material term of Sections II, III, IV of this Settlement Agreement is modified or rendered unenforceable, the parties shall negotiate an equivalent or comparable substitute term or other appropriate credit or adjustment. In the event that the parties are unable to agree on such a substitute term or appropriate credit or adjustment, then the parties will submit the issue to the Court for resolution, subject to any available appeal rights. In the event that any third-party challenge is made after December 31, 1998, any payments due under Paragraph II.B. shall be made to the State according to the terms of this Settlement Agreement, and only those payments due under Paragraph II.D. shall be placed into escrow as provided above.

In the event that the Court determines that there has been a failure of consideration legally sufficient to warrant termination of this Settlement Agreement, then this Settlement Agreement may be terminated by the party adversely affected. In the event of such termination, the action will be reinstated and all decisions of the trial court, and any party's appeal or other rights with respect thereto, will have the same force and effect as if this Settlement Agreement had never been entered into.

C. Obligations Several, Not Joint.

All obligations of the Settling Defendants pursuant to this Settlement Agreement are intended to be and shall remain several, and not joint.

D. Headings.

The headings of the paragraphs of this Settlement Agreement are not binding and are for reference only and do not limit, expand or otherwise affect the contents of this Settlement Agreement.

E. No Determination or Admission.

This Settlement Agreement and any proceedings taken hereunder are not intended to be and shall not in any event be construed as, or deemed to be, an admission or concession or evidence of any liability or any wrongdoing whatsoever on the part of any party hereto or any person covered by the releases provided under paragraphs III.B. and C. hereof. The Settling Defendants specifically disclaim and deny any liability or wrongdoing whatsoever with respect to the allegations and claims asserted against them in this action and enter into this Settlement Agreement solely to avoid the further expense, inconvenience, burden and uncertainty of litigation.

F. Non-Admissibility.

The settlement negotiations resulting in this Settlement Agreement have been undertaken by the parties hereto in good faith and for settlement purposes only, and neither this Settlement Agreement nor any evidence of negotiations hereunder shall be offered or received in evidence in this action, or any other action or proceeding, for any purpose other than in an action or proceeding arising under this Settlement Agreement.

G. Amendment; Waiver.

This Settlement Agreement may be amended only by a written instrument executed by the Attorney General and the Settling Defendants. The waiver of any rights conferred hereunder shall be effective only if made by written instrument executed by the waiving party. The waiver by any party of any breach of this Settlement Agreement shall not be deemed to be or construed as a waiver of any other breach, whether prior, subsequent or contemporaneous, of this Settlement Agreement.

H. Notices.

All notices or other communications to any party to this Settlement Agreement shall be in writing (and shall include telex, telecopy or similar writing) and shall be given to the respective parties hereto at the following addresses. Any party hereto may change the name and address of the person designated to receive notice on behalf of such party by notice given as provided in this paragraph.

K. Construction.

None of the parties hereto shall be considered to be the drafter of this Settlement Agreement or any provision hereof for the purpose of any statute, case law or rule of interpretation or construction that would or might cause any provision to be construed against the drafter hereof.

L. Severability.

Subject to the provisions of Paragraph V.B., the terms of this Agreement are severable. If any term of this Agreement is found to be unlawful, the remaining terms shall remain in full force and effect, and the parties agree to negotiate a substitute term of equivalent value.

M. Intended Beneficiaries.

This action was brought by the State of Minnesota, through its Attorney General, and by Blue Cross to recover certain monies and to promote the health and welfare of the people of Minnesota. No portion of this Settlement Agreement shall provide any rights to, or be enforceable by, any person or entity that is neither a party hereto nor a person encompassed by the releases provided in paragraphs III.B. and C. of this Settlement Agreement. Except as expressly provided in this Settlement Agreement, no portion of this Settlement Agreement shall bind any non-party or determine, limit or prejudice the rights of any such person or entity. None of the rights granted or obligations assumed under this Settlement Agreement by the parties hereto may be assigned or otherwise conveyed without the express prior written consent of all of the parties hereto.

N. Counterparts.

This Settlement Agreement may be executed in counterparts. Facsimile or photocopied signatures shall be considered as valid signatures as of the date hereof, although the original signature pages shall thereafter be appended to this Settlement Agreement.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto, through their fully authorized representatives, have agreed to this

APPENDIX A

FORMULA FOR CALCULATING STATE OF MINNESOTA VOLUME ADJUSTMENTS

Any payment that by the terms of the Settlement Agreement is to be adjusted pursuant to this Appendix (the "Applicable Base Payment") shall be adjusted pursuant to this Appendix in the following manner:

(A) in the event the aggregate number of units of Tobacco Products sold domestically by the Settling Defendants in the Applicable Year (as defined hereinbelow) (the "Actual Volume") is greater than the aggregate number of units of Tobacco Products sold domestically by the Settling Defendants in 1997 (the "Base Volume"), the Applicable Base Payment shall be multiplied by the ratio of the Actual Volume to the Base Volume;

(B) in the event the Actual Volume is less than the Base Volume,

(i) the Applicable Base Payment shall be multiplied by the ratio of the Actual Volume to the Base Volume, and the resulting product shall be divided by 0.98; and

(ii) if a reduction of the Applicable Base Payment results from the application of subparagraph (B)(i) of this Appendix, but the Settling Defendants' aggregate net operating profits from domestic sales of Tobacco Products for the Applicable Year (the "Actual Net Operating Profit") is greater than the Settling Defendants' aggregate net operating profits from domestic sales of Tobacco Products in 1997 (the "Base Net Operating Profit") (such Base Net Operating Profit being adjusted upward by the greater of the rate of 3% per annum or the actual total percent change in the Consumer Price Index, in either instance for the period between January 1, 1998 and the date on which the payment at issue is made), then the amount by which the Applicable Base Payment is reduced by the application of subparagraph (B)(i) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by 2.55% of 25% of such increase in such profits. For purposes of this Appendix, "net operating profits from domestic sales of Tobacco Products" shall mean net operating profits from domestic sales of Tobacco Products as reported to the United States Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") for the Applicable Year or, in the case of a Settling Defendant that does not report profits to the SEC, as reported in financial statements prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles and audited by a nationally recognized accounting firm. The determination of the Settling Defendants' aggregate net operating profits from domestic sales of Tobacco Products shall be derived using the same methodology as was employed in deriving such Settling Defendants' aggregate net operating profits from domestic sales of Tobacco Products in 1997. Any increase in an Applicable Base Payment pursuant to this subparagraph B(ii) shall be payable within 120 days after the date that the payment at issue was required to be made.

(C) "Applicable Year" means (i) with respect to the payments made pursuant to paragraph II.D of the Settlement Agreement, the calendar year ending on the date on which the payment at issue is due, regardless of when such payment is made; and (ii) with respect to all other payments made pursuant to this Settlement Agreement, the calendar year immediately preceding the year in which the payment at issue is due, regardless of when such payment is made.

CONSENT JUDGMENT

WHEREAS, the State of Minnesota, by its Attorney General, Hubert H. Humphrey III, and Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Minnesota filed their Complaint herein on August 17, 1994, and their Second Amended Complaint on January 6, 1998;

WHEREAS, Defendants have contested the claims in the Plaintiffs' Complaint and Second Amended Complaint;

WHEREAS, the parties recognize that Congress is considering national tobacco legislation and have agreed to settle this case on a basis which acknowledges possible federal legislation, but which guarantees to the people of Minnesota the relief granted herein;

WHEREAS, Settling Defendants, in the Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment, have waived as specified therein their right to challenge the terms of this Consent Judgment as being superseded or preempted by future Congressional enactments; and

WHEREAS, the Attorney General believes the entry of this Consent Judgment is appropriate and in the public interest;

NOW THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED AS FOLLOWS:

I. JURISDICTION AND VENUE

The Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action and over the Settling Defendants under Minn. Stat. §§ 8.31, 325D.15, 325D.45, 325D.58, 325F.70 and 484.01 (1994). Venue is proper in Ramsey County pursuant to Minn. Stat. §§ 325D.65 and 542.09 (1994) in that Settling Defendants do business in Ramsey County.

II. DEFINITIONS

The definitions set forth in the Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment ("Settlement Agreement") are incorporated by reference herein.

III. APPLICABILITY

This Consent Judgment applies only to Settling Defendants in their corporate capacity acting through their respective successors and assigns, directors, officers, employees, agents, subsidiaries, divisions, or other internal organizational units of any kind or any other entities acting in concert or participation with them. The remedies and penalties in Sections XD. and E. herein for a violation of this Consent Judgment shall apply only to Settling Defendants, and shall not be imposed or assessed against any employee, officer or director of Settling Defendants or other person or entity as a consequence of such a violation, and there shall be no jurisdiction under this Consent Judgment to do so.

IV. EFFECT ON THIRD PARTIES

This Consent Judgment is not intended to and does not vest standing in any third party with respect to the terms hereof, or create for any person other than the parties hereto a right to enforce the terms hereof.

V. INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

Settling Defendants are permanently enjoined from:

A. On and after December 31, 1998, marketing, licensing, distributing, selling or offering, directly or indirectly, including by catalogue or direct mail, in the State of Minnesota, any service or item (other than tobacco products or any item the sole function of which is to advertise tobacco products) which bears the brand name (alone or in conjunction with any other word), logo, symbol, motto, selling message, recognizable color or pattern of colors, or any other indicia or product identification identical or similar to, or identifiable with, those used for any domestic brand of tobacco products.

B. Making any material misrepresentation of fact regarding the health consequence of using any tobacco product, including any tobacco additives, filters, paper or other ingredients. Nothing in this paragraph shall limit the exercise of any First Amendment right or any defense or position which persons bound by this Consent Judgment may assert in any judicial, legislative, or regulatory forum.

C. Entering into any contract, combination or conspiracy between or among themselves, which has the purpose or effect of: (1) limiting competition in the production or distribution of information about the health hazards or other consequences of the use of their products; (2) limiting or suppressing research into smoking and health; or (3) limiting or suppressing research into, marketing, or development of new products.

D. Taking any action, directly or indirectly, to target children in Minnesota in the advertising, promotion, or marketing of cigarettes, or taking any action the primary purpose of which is to initiate, maintain or increase the incidence of underage smoking in Minnesota.

VI. DISSOLUTION OF DEFENDANT COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH

Settling Defendants represent that they have the authority to effectuate the following and will do so within 90 days of this Agreement: The Council for Tobacco Research-U.S.A. Inc. shall cease all operations except as necessary to comply with existing grants or contracts and to continue its defense of other lawsuits and will be disbanded and dissolved within a reasonable time period thereafter. To the extent not required elsewhere in this Consent Judgment, the Council for Tobacco Research shall forward all smoking and health research in its possession or control to the Food and Drug Administration subject to appropriate confidentiality protection required by contracts between the Council for Tobacco Research and any third party. Defendants shall preserve all other records of the Council for Tobacco Research which relate in any way to issues raised in this or any other Attorney General lawsuit. Defendants may not reconstitute the Council for Tobacco Research or its function in any form.

VII. PUBLIC ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS AND COURT FILES

The Court's previous Protective Orders are hereby dissolved with respect to all documents, including the 4A and 4B indices and the privilege logs, which have been produced to the Plaintiffs and for which Defendants have made no claim of privilege or Category II trade secret protection. Such documents shall be made available to the public at the Depository, in the manner provided as follows:

1. The public shall be given access to all non-privileged documents contained in the Minnesota Depository, including all documents set forth in Paragraph VII.A. above.

2. Plaintiffs and Settling Defendants shall meet with representatives of the current Minnesota Depository administrators, Smart Legal Assistance and Merrill Corporation, and/or other appropriate persons, to discuss staffing issues and the procedures that should be implemented to continue the operation of the Minnesota Depository, thereby to ensure broad and orderly access to these documents.

3. Category II documents shall be returned to the Defendants as soon as practical, provided that Defendants, upon receiving appropriate assurances of trade secret protection from the Food and Drug Administration, shall forward a copy of the Category II documents bearing the Bates numbers from this action to said agency. Plaintiffs shall retain the Bates stamp numbers of all Category II documents produced in this case.

B. The documents produced in this case are not "government data" under the Minnesota Government Data Practices Act.

C. For documents upon which a privilege was claimed and found not to exist, including any briefs, memoranda and other pleadings filed by the parties which include reference to such documents, Plaintiffs may seek court approval to make such documents available to the public, provided that any such request be made to the Court within 45 days of the date of entry of this Consent Judgment.

D. Defendant British-American Tobacco Company Limited shall maintain and operate the Guildford Depository for a period of ten years. Defendant British-American Tobacco Company Limited shall have the option of maintaining such depository at its current location or at an appropriate alternative location. All documents, except those identified in Paragraph VII.A.3 above, which were selected by plaintiffs from the Guildford Depository in response to the Plaintiffs' discovery requests shall be moved to and retained at the Minnesota Depository.

E. The Minnesota Depository shall be maintained and operated at Settling Defendants' sole expense, in the manner set forth above for ten years after the date hereof, or such longer period as may be provided in federal legislation for a national document depository. At the end of such period, or sooner, at the State's discretion, the documents shall be transferred to the State Archives or other appropriate state body, where they shall remain available for historical and research purposes. The parties and the Depository staff shall cooperate with the State Archivist or such other state officials as may be involved in transferring the documents to the custody of the State.

F. Settling Defendants shall provide to the State for the Depository a copy of all existing CD-ROMs of documents produced in this action that do not contain any privileged or work-product documents or information, to be placed in the Depository.

G. Defendants shall produce to the Depository all documents produced by such defendants in other United States smoking and health litigation but not previously produced in Minnesota, within 30 days of their production such the other litigation, provided Defendants do not claim privilege with respect to such documents, and provided such documents are not subject to any protective order.

VIII. EQUITABLE RELIEF: NATIONAL RESEARCH; DEPOSIT OF FUNDS.

A. In furtherance of the equitable relief sought by the State, pursuant to the Court's equitable powers to shape appropriate injunctive relief, in light of the public health interests demonstrated by the evidence in this case, and pursuant to the agreement of the parties:

1. Consistent with the Prayer for Relief in the State's Complaint and Amended Complaints that the Defendants fund cessation programs in the State of Minnesota, the amount due in December, 1998 ($102 million), pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, Section II.D, shall be deposited into a separate cessation account and used to offer smoking cessation opportunities to Minnesota smokers, and shall be administered as ordered by the Court.

2. In addition to other money paid under this Consent Judgment and the Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment, each Settling Defendant shall pay pro rata in proportion to its Market Share, on or before June 1, 1998, and no later than June 1 of each succeeding year through and including June 1, 2007, its share of $10 million into a national research account, to be administered as ordered by the Court. The parties envision that approximately 70% of the $100 million total will be used for research grants relating to the elimination of tobacco use by children, and 30% for program implementation, evaluation and other tobacco control purposes; provided, however, the administrator of the national research account may, in its discretion, change the allocation.

3. The State shall submit a plan for the administration and authorized uses of the funds payable under this section within 45 days of the date of entry of this Consent Judgment.

4. Monies payable under this section and Section V.B. of the Settlement Agreement shall be deposited in interest bearing accounts at a bank to be designated by the Commissioner of Finance. Settling Defendants' payment of the amounts set forth above are Settling Defendants' sole obligation under this section.

B. Except as specified in this section and Section V.B of the Settlement Agreement, all monies payable under Sections II.B. and D. of the Settlement Agreement between the parties shall be deposited into the general fund of the State of Minnesota.

IX. FINAL DISPOSITION

This Consent Judgment resolves all claims set forth in the State's Second Amended Complaint against Defendants, which are hereby dismissed with prejudice, and shall constitute the final disposition of this action.

X. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

A. Jurisdiction of this case is retained for the purpose of enforcement and enabling the continuing proceedings contemplated herein. Any party to this Consent Judgment may apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction and enforcement of this Consent Judgment.

B. This Consent Judgment is not intended to be and shall not in any event be construed as, or deemed to be, an admission or concession or evidence of personal jurisdiction or any liability or any wrongdoing whatsoever on the part of any Defendant. The Defendants specifically disclaim any liability or wrongdoing whatsoever with respect to the claims and allegations asserted against them in this action and Settling Defendants have stipulated to entry of this Consent Judgment solely to avoid the further expense, inconvenience, burden and risk of litigation.

C. Except as provided in Section III.D. of the Settlement Agreement and Stipulation for Entry of Consent Judgment, this Consent Judgment shall not be modified unless the party seeking modification demonstrates, by clear and convincing evidence, that it will suffer irreparable harm from new and unforeseen conditions; provided, however, that the provisions of Section III of this Consent Judgment shall in no event be subject to modification. Changes in the economic conditions of the parties shall not be grounds for modification. It is intended that Settling Defendants will comply with this Consent Judgment as originally entered, even if Settling Defendants' obligations hereunder are greater than those imposed under current or future law. Therefore, a change in law that results, directly or indirectly, in more favorable or beneficial treatment of any one or more of the Settling Defendants shall not support modification of this Consent Judgment.

D. In enforcing this Consent Judgment the Attorney General shall have the discovery powers of Minn. Stat. § 8.31 (1996), as amended. Any Settling Defendant which violates this Consent Judgment shall be subject to contempt and to the remedies provided in Minn. Stat. § 8.31 (1996), as amended. In addition, in any proceeding which results in a finding that a Settling Defendant violated this Consent Judgment, the responsible Settling Defendant or Settling Defendants shall pay the State's costs and attorneys' fees incurred in such proceeding.

E. The remedies in this Consent Judgment are cumulative and in addition to any other remedies the State may have at law or equity. Nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the State from bringing any action for conduct not released hereunder, even though that conduct may also violate this Consent Judgment.

LET JUDGMENT BE ENTERED ACCORDINGLY.
