

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

---

MARK JANUS,

Petitioner,

v.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE,
COUNTY, AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES,
COUNCIL 31, ET AL.,

Respondents.

---

On Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

---

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF
ATLANTIC LEGAL FOUNDATION
IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

---

MARTIN S. KAUFMAN*

* Counsel of Record

ATLANTIC LEGAL FOUNDATION

500 MAMARONECK AVENUE

SUITE 320

HARRISON, NY 10528

(914) 834-3322

mkaufman@atlanticlegal.org

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

---

QUESTION PRESENTED

The question presented is:

Should Abood be overruled and public-sector agency fee arrangements declared unconstitutional under the First Amendment?

RULE 29.6 DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Pursuant to Rule 29.6 of the Rules of this Court, amici curiae state the following:

Atlantic Legal Foundation is a not for profit corporation incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. It has no corporate shareholders, parents, subsidiaries or affiliates.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTION PRESENTED.....	i
RULE 29.6 DISCLOSURE STATEMENT.....	ii
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES.....	iv
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE . . . . .	1
INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. . . . .	2
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT. . . . .	6
ARGUMENT.....	10
I. THE FIRST AMENDMENT WAS INTENDED TO PROTECT AGAINST COMPELLED SUPPORT FOR POLITICAL SPEECH.. . . . .	11
a. Public sector collective bargaining is essentially political advocacy. . . . .	15
b. The mandatory exaction of dissenters’ agency fee money infringes the dissenters’ First Amendment rights. . . . .	25
CONCLUSION. . . . .	27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page
CASES
Aboud v. Detroit Bd. of Educ. ,
431 U.S. 209 (1977). . . . .	passim
Agostini v. Felton , 521 U.S. 203 (1997). . . . .	8
Chicago Teachers Union v. Hudson ,
475 U.S. 292 (1986). . . . .	5
Citizens United v. Fed. Election
Comm'n , 558 U.S. 310 (2010). . . . .	8, 13
Commc'ns Workers of Am. v. Beck ,
487 U.S. 735 (1988). . . . .	14
Davenport v. Wash. Educ. Ass'n ,
551 U.S. 177 (2007). . . . .	10
FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc. ,
551 U.S. 449 (2007). . . . .	8
First Nat'l Bank of Bos. v. Bellotti ,
435 U.S. 765 (1978). . . . .	25
Int'l Ass'n of Machinists v. Street ,
367 U.S. 740 (1961). . . . .	24
Knox v. Service Employees International Union ,
Local 1000 , 567 U.S. 298 (2012). . . . .	passim
Lehnert v. Ferris Faculty Ass'n ,
500 U.S. 507 (1991). . . . .	14, 16, 21
Riley v. Nat'l Fed'n of the Blind of N.C., Inc. ,
487 U.S. 781 (1988). . . . .	12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES (cont'd)

	Page
CASES (cont'd)
Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees , 468 U.S. 609 (1984) . . .	13
Rwy Employees v. Hanson ,
351 U.S. 225 (1956) . . . . .	24
Seidemann v. Bowen ,
584 F.3d 104 (2d Cir. 2009) . . . . .	21
Snyder v. Phelps , 131 S. Ct. 1207 (2011) . . . . .	13
United States v. United Foods, Inc. ,
533 U. S. 405 (2001) . . . . .	11, 12, 15
W. Virginia State Board of Educ. v. Barnette ,
319 U.S. 624 (1943) . . . . .	12, 13
Wooley v. Maynard , 430 U.S. 705 (1977) . . .	12, 13
 STATUTES AND REGULATIONS
Illinois Public Labor Relations Act (“IPLRA”)
5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/1, et seq. . . . . .	2
5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/4 . . . . .	3
5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/6(e) . . . . .	3, 5
5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/6(f) . . . . .	4
5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/17 . . . . .	18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES (cont'd)

Page

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Brant, Irving, James Madison: The Nationalist 354 (1948). . . . .	11
Gely, Rafael, et al. , Educating the United States Supreme Court at Summers' School: A Lesson on the "Special Character of the Animal" , 14 Employee Rts. & Emp. Pol'y J. 93 (2010). . . . .	23
Summers, Clyde, Public Sector Bargaining: A Different Animal , 5 U. Pa. J. Lab. & Emp. L. 441 (2003). . . . .	18, 19, 20
Union Membership Down, Political Spending Up, e21 Staff (Aug. 2014), available at https://economics21.org/html/union-membership-down-political-spending-1078.html (last visited 7-8-2017). . . . .	21-22
U.S. Dep't of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Econ. News Release, tbl. 5, Union affiliation of employed wage and salary workers by state, available at http://www.bls.gov/news.release/union2.t05.htm (last visited 7-8-2017). . . . .	7

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES (cont'd)

Page

OTHER AUTHORITIES (cont'd)

Why Public-Sector Strikes Are So Rare,
in Governing - The States and Localities, available at http://www.governing.com/topics/public- workforce/col-why-public-sector-strikes-are-rare.html
(last visited 7-8-2017). . . . . 18

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE<sup>1</sup>

Amicus Curiae Atlantic Legal Foundation is a nonprofit, nonpartisan public interest law firm that provides effective legal advice, without fee, to parents, scientists, educators, and other individuals and trade associations. Atlantic Legal Foundation is guided by a basic but fundamental philosophy: Justice prevails only in the presence of reason and in the absence of prejudice. Atlantic Legal Foundation seeks to promote sound thinking in the resolution of legal disputes and the formulation of public policy. Among other things, the Atlantic Legal Foundation's mission is to advance the rule of law in courts and before administrative agencies by advocating limited and efficient government, free enterprise, individual liberty, school choice, and sound science. Atlantic Legal Foundation's leadership includes

---

<sup>1</sup> Pursuant to Rule 37.2(a), notice of intent to file this amicus brief was provided to the parties and the parties have consented to the filing of this brief, which consents have been lodged with the Court

Pursuant to Rule 37.6, amicus affirms that no counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than amicus curiae or their counsel made a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief.

distinguished legal scholars and practitioners from across the legal community.

The Foundation has litigated several “compelled speech” and “compelled association” cases in the Second and Third Circuits as “first chair” trial and appellate counsel for students at public universities challenging the use of mandatory student fees to fund political speech of organizations with which they disagreed, and as counsel or co-counsel for amici, most recently in Harris v. Quinn, 134 S. Ct. 2618 (2014) and Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association, 136 S. Ct. 1083 (2016).

INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT

Petitioner Mark Janus is an Illinois state employee who is being forced to pay agency fees to a union, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (“AFSCME”), Council 31, against his will. Pet.App.10. AFSCME exclusively represents over 35,000 state employees who work in numerous departments, agencies, boards, and commissions that are part of the executive branch of the government of the State of Illinois. Id.

The Illinois Public Labor Relations Act (“IPLRA”), 5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/1, et seq., grants public sector unions the power to be “the exclusive representative for the employees of [a bargaining] unit for the purpose of collective bargaining with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other conditions of employment (Id. 315/6(c)) and Illinois compels state employees to pay “agency fees” to an exclusive representative for negotiating with the State over pay, benefits, hours, and other conditions of employment, which directly affect the public fisc and are, therefore, matters of government policy.

Illinois law gives the union authority to speak and contract for all employees in the bargaining unit, including those who do not join the union and oppose its advocacy activities. Government officials are precluded from dealing with individual employees or employee associations other than the union. 5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/4.

The IPLRA empowers the union, as exclusive representative to require those non-union member employees to pay for its “bargaining” activity by authorizing “agency fee” arrangements through which employees are forced, as a condition of employment, to “pay to the exclusive representative a proportionate share of the costs of the collective bargaining process, contract administration and pursuing matters affecting wages, hours and conditions of employment.” 5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/6(e). The Illinois agency fee requirement follows the decision in Abood v. Detroit Bd. of Ed., 431 U.S. 209 (1977), concerning the compulsory fees public employees can be required to pay.

Janus and all other employees represented by AFSCME are required, by operation of 5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/6(f), to subsidize AFSCME's efforts to advocate for state programs and policies, regardless of their personal views concerning these policies and AFSCME's positions with respect to them, and regardless of whether a non-consenting state employee opposes the positions the union takes in collective bargaining and regardless of whether the positions the union takes in collective bargaining are contrary to a state employee's job-related interests. This regime of compelled political speech is irreconcilable with this Court's recent recognition of "the critical First Amendment rights at stake" in such arrangements. Knox v. Serv. Emps. Int'l Union, Local 1000, 567 U.S. 298, 311 (2012).

The logic and reasoning of this Court's recent decisions have shattered the intellectual foundation of its approval of such compulsory fee-payment regime in Abood – a decision that was questionable, and questioned, from the beginning, as Justice Powell argued in his separate opinion, in which he described the majority opinion as "unsupported by either precedent or reason." Abood at 245 (Powell, J., concurring in the judgment).

The time has come for this Court to reconsider the Abood decision and give “a First Amendment issue of this importance” better consideration than it received in Abood. See Harris v. Quinn, 134 S. Ct. 2618, 2632 (2014).

The agency fees Janus and other Illinois public employees who are not members of the union are compelled to pay AFSCME and other exclusive representatives are calculated by the unions themselves. 5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/6(e). Under Chicago Teachers Union v. Hudson, 475 U.S. 292, 304 (1986), unions are supposed to calculate their agency fees based on an audit of their expenditures during the prior fiscal year and to provide non-members with a notice explaining the calculation of the agency fee. AFSCME calculated its 2015 agency fee at a facially incredible 78.06% of full union dues based on an audit of union expenditures in calendar year 2009, six years earlier. Pet.App.34.

Collective bargaining by public employee unions inherently involves core political speech and the scheme of compelled political speech that Abood tolerated is inconsistent with the “critical First Amendment rights at stake.” Knox, 567 U.S. at 311 (2012). Abood, the cornerstone of the compelled agency fee regime, is “unsupported by either precedent or reason.” Abood at 245 (Powell, J., concurring in the judgment) and the reasoning of this Court's recent decisions in Knox and Harris v. Quinn, 134 S. Ct. 2618 (2014) has further undermined the already weak intellectual foundation of its earlier approval of compulsory union dues or agency fees.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Liberty of conscience, protected by the First Amendment, includes the right to be free from compelled support of political activities, including the political activities of public employee labor unions. There is no practical distinction between “bargaining” between public employee unions and government units or agencies as employers and “lobbying” because even “pure” collective bargaining activities involve the essential political enterprise of allocating government resources and shaping government policies. These issues include such matters as pay and benefits, seniority, job security, promotion and discipline, measurement of employee performance and efficiency, and lay-offs. While each of these matters are related to public employee working conditions and compensation and are legitimate subjects of collective bargaining, they are also of immense bearing on the allocation of public resources, taxes, public debt and unfunded pension liabilities, and similar issues of political moment.

In this time of budget crises for many states, counties and municipalities, and a nationwide crisis in unfunded public employee pension liabilities, it is difficult to imagine more politically charged issues than those directly related to how much money state and local governments should allocate to personnel costs and what policies government should adopt to increase labor efficiency, matters that are traditionally within the realm of collective bargaining. Contrary to a major premise underlying Abood and its progeny, it is not possible to neatly separate “chargeable” collective bargaining and contract administration expenses from “non-chargeable” political advocacy by public employee unions.

Illinois compels non-consenting public employees to be represented by – and to fund – labor unions that espouse a very specific point of view on these pressing public questions. More than twenty other states compel millions of public employees<sup>2</sup> to pay hundreds of millions of dollars to public-employee unions regardless of whether those unions advocate policies the employees support and regardless of whether the policies benefit those employees. The constitutionality of such regimes is thus of profound importance.

---

<sup>2</sup> U.S. Dep’t of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Econ. News Release, tbl. 5, Union affiliation of employed wage and salary workers by state, available at <http://www.bls.gov/news.release/union2.t05.htm> (last visited July 8, 2017).

This scheme was established in a decision that is based on flawed assumptions, questionable reasoning, dubious grounding in current practice, and which is irreconcilable with this Court's more recent opinions, as well as the general principles underlying fundamental First Amendment jurisprudence. Stare decisis should not prevent the Court from remedying ongoing deprivations of a core constitutional right.<sup>3</sup> This Court should instead do as it has twice suggested it should do, and give this important First Amendment issue the full consideration it deserves. See Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2632 (“Surely a First Amendment issue of this importance deserved better treatment” than it received in Abood.)

There is no interest, compelling or otherwise, that justifies the interference with fundamental First Amendment liberties that occurs when non-consenting public employees are compelled by law, regulation or contract between government and a union to finance the activities of public employee unions, including labor-management collective <sup>3</sup> This Court has “not hesitated to overrule decisions offensive to the First Amendment,” Citizens United v. Fed. Election Comm’n, 558 U.S. 310, 363 (2010) (quoting FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 500 (2007) (opinion of Scalia, J.)) and stare decisis “is at its weakest when [the Court] interpret[s] the Constitution.” Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 235 (1997).

---

bargaining negotiations, because those activities involve essentially political decisions about allocating government resources or affecting other governmental activities of concern to the public generally. Prior decisions granting public employee unions the power to compel financial support from non-consenting employees inhibits those employees' First Amendment rights.

Abood, the precedent on which the decision below rests, is four decades old. It does not, conceptually or in practice, protect public employees who do not support unions' political or ideological programs from having their money used to promote policies which they do not wish to support.

After its decision in Abood, this Court recognized that agency-shop provisions which compel public employees to subsidize public-sector unions' efforts to achieve the unions' favored programs and to obtain favorable political actions from government officials are a "significant impingement" on employees' First Amendment rights. See Knox, 567 U.S. at 310; see also Harris, 134 S. Ct. 2618 (2014).

It is time for this Court to recognize explicitly that the notions of promoting "labor peace" and discouraging "free riders" are insufficient to support infringement of core First Amendment rights, and to overrule Abood and its progeny.

ARGUMENT

The deduction of money from workers' paychecks by labor unions (or by public employers on behalf of unions) – whether called “dues” or “agency shop fees” – and expenditure of those monies collected from non-consenting government workers on both collective bargaining and patently political activities implicate important issues of free speech, freedom of association, and freedom of choice. Labor unions often complain that restricting their access to such monies diminishes their effectiveness and imposes substantial hardships on them, but this Court's focus should not be on the difficulties faced by unions when the law compels them to obtain permission before taking non-members' money. Instead, the focus must be on the individual workers' right to choose what to speak and whom to support. See Davenport v. Wash. Educ. Ass'n, 551 U.S. 177, 187 (2007).

The current system of compulsory agency fees collected from public employees who are not union members is based on decisions of this Court that are irreconcilable with principles underlying First Amendment protections and this Court's more recent First Amendment jurisprudence.

I. THE FIRST AMENDMENT WAS INTENDED TO PROTECT AGAINST COMPELLED SUPPORT FOR POLITICAL SPEECH.

In Abood, the Court has quoted with approval Thomas Jefferson’s statement that “to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves, is sinful and tyrannical.”<sup>4</sup> Abood, 431 U.S. at 234 n.31 and it has recognized that the “freedom of speech” guaranteed by the First Amendment “may prevent the government from compelling individuals to express certain views or from compelling certain individuals to pay subsidies for speech to which they object.” United States v. United Foods, 533 U.S. 405, 410 (2001) (citations omitted). Because “First Amendment values are at serious risk if the government can compel a particular citizen, or a discrete group of citizens, to pay special subsidies for speech on the side that it favors,” schemes that compel such subsidies “must pass First Amendment scrutiny.” Id. at 411.

More recently, this Court recognized the “bedrock principle that, except perhaps in the rarest of circumstances, no person. . . may be compelled to subsidize speech by a third party that he or she does not wish to support,” Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2644 (2014), and “compelled funding of the speech of other private speakers or groups presents the same dangers as compelled speech.” Id. at 2639. In earlier cases this Court recognized that the freedom of expression guaranteed by the First Amendment protects choice in “the decision of both what to say and what not to say,” Riley v. Nat’l Fed’n of the Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 782 (1988), and for that reason the Court has repeatedly upheld the principle that people have the right to refrain from subsidizing messages with which they disagree. See, e.g., United Foods, Inc., 533 U.S. at 410; Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 714 (1977).

---

<sup>4</sup> Quoted in Irving Brant, James Madison: The Nationalist 354 (1948).

In West Virginia State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624 (1943), the Court established the principle that the First Amendment protection of the individual’s mind free from compulsion by the state is paramount. Id. at 637, 642.<sup>5</sup> In Wooley, supra, the Court began “with the proposition from Barnette that the right of freedom of thought protected by the First Amendment against state action includes both the right to speak freely and the right to refrain from speaking at all,” Wooley at 714; and it recognized that the New Hampshire

---

<sup>5</sup> The Barnette Court concluded that, “[i]f there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in . . . matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein.” Id. at 642.

law that incorporated a slogan on required license plates “forces an individual . . . to be an instrument for fostering public adherence to an ideological point of view he finds unacceptable.” Id. at 715.<sup>6</sup>

Scrutiny of compelled political speech or restrictions on speech about public-policy choices is especially rigorous, Citizens United v. Fed. Election Comm’n, supra at 340 (citation omitted), because speech concerning public affairs is “the essence of self-government.” Snyder v. Phelps, 131 S. Ct. 1207, 1215 (2011). Involuntary subsidization of speech must be justified by a “compelling state interest that cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms,” Knox, 567 U.S. at 310, quoting Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 623 (1984).

More specifically germane to the issue in this case, the Court has recognized the importance of workers’ free speech rights and has held that it would violate the First Amendment for workers’ earnings to be taken by the state and transferred to labor unions for use in promoting political messages with which the workers disagree. See Lehnert v. Ferris Faculty Ass'n, 500 U.S. 507, 522 (1991); Comm'ns Workers of Am. v. Beck, 487 U.S. 735, 745 (1988); Abood, 431 U.S. at 244.

---

<sup>6</sup> The Abood majority saw little connection between Wooley and Barnette and the compelled payment of agency fees. Abood cited Wooley only once, in a footnote string citation for general First Amendment principles, 431 U.S. at 231 n.28, and referred to Barnette’s “fixed star” language only to support its conclusion that unions could not compel contributions for “ideological” causes. 431 U.S. at 235.

When a state compels its employees to pay union dues or agency fees that support political activities it is “an infringement of [the workers’] constitutional rights.” Abood, 431 U.S. at 234.<sup>7</sup> Abood applied these principles to invalidate compelled subsidization of ideological or political union speech, but it created an anomalous exception that permits the compelled subsidization of political speech or association in the context of collective bargaining. Abood, 431 U.S. at 232. That exception conflicts with other decisions of this Court, is not grounded in sound logic, and tolerates compelled political speech. The exception cannot survive First Amendment scrutiny.

Abood can be reconciled with this Court's other First Amendment jurisprudence only if (1) public-sector union speech in collective bargaining is not – contrary to Abood itself – “political” or “ideological” speech designed to “influence government decision-making,” Abood, 431 U.S. at 231; or (2) the governmental interests in promoting “labor peace” and preventing “free-riding” are “compelling” enough to justify compelled financing of political speech. The first contention is not only contrary to Knox, Harris, and Abood, it “flies in the face of reality.” Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2642. The second proposition is contradicted by this Court’s opinions in Knox and Harris, and conflicts with this Court’s other decisions holding that similar rationales do not justify compelling subsidization of even “mundane commercial” speech. See United Foods, 533 U.S. 405 (2001).<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> Even the dissent in Harris perceived that “compelled funding of the speech of other private speakers or groups presents the same dangers as compelled speech.” Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2656 (Kagan, J. dissenting).

a. Public sector collective bargaining is essentially political advocacy.

Public employee collective bargaining is, in effect, lobbying carried out in a conference room where labor-management negotiations take place, rather than in “traditional” venues for exercising political “clout,” such as public demonstrations, political fund-raising dinners, the corridors of the legislature’s chamber, a public official’s office, over lunch, or on a golf course.

---

<sup>8</sup> The majority in Abood acknowledged the “truism” that in the collective-bargaining context, “public employee unions attempt to influence governmental policymaking,” and, consequently, “their activities – and the views of members who disagree with them – may be properly termed political.” 431 U.S. at 231.

Abood held that the First Amendment prohibits the Government from “requiring any [objecting non-member of a union] to contribute to the support of an ideological cause he may oppose.” 431 U.S. at 235, because the “central purpose of the First Amendment was to protect the free discussion of governmental affairs,” and this “fundamental First Amendment interest” was infringed even when non-members were “compelled to make [pursuant to agency-shop provisions], rather than prohibited from making, contributions.” Abood at 231, 234. In Lehnert the Court held that “the State constitutionally may not compel its employees to subsidize legislative lobbying or other political union activities outside the limited context of contract ratification or implementation.” 500 U.S. 507, 522 (1991) (opinion of Blackmun, J.).

But Abood is consistent with the “bedrock principles” only if there is a constitutionally meaningful difference between a public-sector union’s efforts to advance an agenda through collective bargaining, and the same union’s efforts to advance its avowedly political or ideological agenda through lobbying or campaign spending. The context in which a public-sector union advocates the same political and public-policy views plainly does not make a difference for First Amendment analysis.

Abood based its distinction between collective bargaining activity and overt political advocacy by analogy to precedent from private-sector collective bargaining cases. It is telling that no Justice of this Court attempted to defend the distinction in Harris v. Quinn, its most recent public employee case.

Moreover, the Abood majority failed to apply heightened First Amendment scrutiny to compulsory agency fees that, even putting the best face on it, support public-sector unions' petitioning of the government, perhaps because of the perception that public employee unions were similar to private sector worker unions. Abood never considered whether agency fees are narrowly tailored and it never considered whether "labor peace" and avoidance of "free riding" can be "achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms" than compulsory fees. Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2639 (quoting Knox, 567 U.S. at 310). Justice Powell, joined by Chief Justice Burger and Justice Blackmun, criticized the majority for not applying exacting scrutiny, see 431 U.S. at 262-64 (Powell, J., concurring in the judgment). In his view the "public-sector union is indistinguishable from the traditional political party" id. at 257 (Powell, J., concurring in the judgment), because "[t]he ultimate objective of a union in the public sector, like that of a political party, is to influence public decisionmaking in accordance with the views and perceived interests of its membership.” Id. at 256.

The Abood majority went astray by applying concepts of “labor peace”<sup>9</sup> and “free riding” from private sector labor relations to public employee union bargaining, without recognizing fundamental differences between the two realms. Contracts between private employers and unions representing private sector employees are private decisions usually disciplined by market forces. See Clyde Summers, Public Sector Bargaining: A Different Animal, 5 U. Pa. J. Lab. & Emp. L. 441 (2003). Errors in financial analysis by the employer regarding the impact of a labor contract, e.g., giving in to expensive union demands, can lead to the employer becoming unprofitable, or

---

<sup>9</sup> In the public employment sector “labor peace” may be significantly less relevant, because many states prohibit public employees from striking. Only 11 states give public employees the right to strike, while the other 39 prohibit it. But even in those 11 states, strikes are rare and alternative dispute resolution methods are used more often. “Why Public-Sector Strikes Are So Rare,” in Governing - The States and Localities, available at <http://www.governing.com/topics/public-workforce/col-why-public-sector-strikes-are-rare.html> (last visited 7-8-2017). In Illinois most “security personnel” are prohibited from striking, and the right of other public employees to strike is severely constrained. See 5 ILL. COMP. STAT. 315/17.

even going out of business, but any resulting harm to consumers and society at large is tempered because competitors or new firms will continue to provide goods or services.

Public sector collective bargaining is intimately related to the allocation of government resources, and how much government will compel individuals and businesses to pay in taxes and what balance of services it will provide are decisions that are fundamentally political. See Summers, supra, at 443. Public spending choices necessarily require either reducing other public programs or raising additional public revenues – either of which is a core and frequently contentious political issue. Balancing competing interests among different public sector unions (e.g., “parity” among police, fire and sanitation services), among various government programs, and between personnel costs and other expenditures (e.g., health care, public assistance, infrastructure or other capital spending, and debt service) are all essentially “political” decisions. See Abood, 431 U.S. at 258 (Powell, J., concurring).

“In the public sector, core issues such as wages, pensions, and benefits are important political issues . . . .” Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2632. Consequently, a “public-sector union, often with a more parochial perspective than government officials, takes many positions during collective bargaining that have powerful political and civic consequences.” Knox, 567 U.S. at 310. As this Court in Harris acknowledged, “it is impossible to argue that . . . state spending for employee benefits in general is not a matter of great public concern.” Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2642-43.

Public sector labor collective bargaining agreements are not private decisions. The contract between a political subdivision or agency and the union is itself a quintessentially political act. Summers, supra, at 442; see also Abood at 222. Public employee collective bargaining is intended “to affect the decisions of government representatives who are engaged in what is “above all a political process,” because decisions in bargaining with the union involve “political ingredients” that require balancing public interests such as the importance of the service involved with the resources available. Id. at 228-29. And, unlike private sector collective bargaining, much of the public employee unions’ “bargaining” activity consist of lobbying and electioneering. Indeed, the public employee unions often classify and justify a large portion of their political contributions, cost of electioneering activities, and lobbying expenditures as part of collective bargaining. See, e.g., Seidemann v. Bowen, 584 F.3d 104 (2d Cir. 2009).<sup>10,11</sup>

---

<sup>10</sup> Moreover, because as Abood itself recognized, a public employer “lacks an important discipline against agreeing to increases in labor costs that in a market system would require price increases,” 431 U.S. at 228, a union’s political “clout” is likely to have more bearing on the decision that it would in a private sector negotiation. Justice Blackmun’s plurality opinion in Lehnert referred to “legislative lobbying” and the “ratification or implementation” of a contract, Lehnert at 520-22 (plurality opinion), and his opinion distinguished “collective-bargaining negotiations” from “lobbying, electoral, and other political activities that do not relate to collective-bargaining agreement[s],” id. at 521. But the connection between a union’s political power – through contributions and manpower – and its ability to “persuade” the public official on the other side of the table does not make legitimate a union’s claim that political expenditures assist it in bargaining over wages, benefits and working conditions; rather it serves to show that the two types of expenditures are like symbiotic organisms, and any separation or distinction is arbitrary and largely artificial.

<sup>11</sup> The vast and increased union funding of political campaigns, despite declining union membership, is noteworthy. While unionization rates have fallen from 16 percent in 1990 to below 11 percent in 2014 (7 percent for private sector workers and 35 percent for public sector workers), total political spending in constant dollars is nearly 80 times higher. During the 2012 federal election cycle political spending by unions was $711 million. Union spending on federal elections was an inflation-adjusted $9 million during the 1990 cycle. Union Membership Down,
(continued...)

As this Court has recognized, a “public-sector union takes many positions during collective bargaining that have powerful political and civic consequences.” Knox, 567 U.S. at 310. The impact of collective bargaining on matters of public concern has direct and significant effect on the fiscal health of state and local governments. The decision to raise public employee salaries or provide generous benefits – or, as in the recent history of the State of Illinois – attempts to reduce personnel costs of government, is a political decision because it will result in either lower or higher taxes, larger or smaller public debt, repair, improvement or disintegration of infrastructure, and public spending generally because “[p]ublic-employee salaries, pensions, and other benefits constitute a substantial percentage of the budgets of many States and their subdivisions.” Knox, 567 U.S. at 320.

---

<sup>11</sup>(...continued)

Political Spending Up, e21 Staff (August 26, 2014), available at <https://economics21.org/html/union-membership-down-political-spending-1078.html> (last visited 7-8-2017). According to another source, in the 2016 election cycle labor union political spending (including lobbying) exceeded $1.7 billion. National Institute for Labor Relations Research, 2016 Election Cycle: Big Labor Exceeds $1.7 Billion Political Spending, available at <http://www.nilrr.org/2017/04/17/2016-election-cycle-big-labor-exceeds-1-7-billion-political-spending/> (last visited 7-8-2017).

When one party in the collective bargaining process is a government entity, negotiations are unavoidably about the use of public resources and thus about how elected or appointed officials will govern. See Rafael Gely, et al., Educating the United States Supreme Court at Summers' School: A Lesson on the "Special Character of the Animal", 14 Employee Rts. & Emp. Pol'y J. 93 (2010). The Abood majority acknowledged that public-sector unions' collective-bargaining constitutes political speech designed to influence governmental decision-making, "[t]here can be no quarrel with the truism" that, in the collective-bargaining context, "public employee unions attempt to influence governmental policymaking," and, consequently, "their activities – and the views of members who disagree with them – may be properly termed political." 431 U.S. at 231. Nevertheless, under Abood government employees who have not joined the union and do not share the union's views on numerous issues have no choice but to finance the very advocacy to which they object. Non-members are compelled by agency shop arrangements to subsidize the union's collective bargaining activities that directly impact public policy choices as a condition of their public employment.

While Abood recognized that core First Amendment principles prohibit compelled funding of union speech directed at “other ideological causes not germane to its duties as a collective bargaining representative,” it nonetheless allowed compelled funding of union lobbying in the context of “collective bargaining.” Id. at 235 (emphasis added). But neither Abood nor subsequent cases have articulated any principled basis for distinguishing between collective-bargaining lobbying and other union lobbying. Rather, Abood justified this artificial distinction solely on the basis that the Court had previously drawn it in the private-sector context in Rwy Employees v. Hanson, 351 U.S. 225 (1956), and Int’l Ass’n of Machinists v. Street, 367 U.S. 740 (1961). Abood, 431 U.S. at 232.

Street and Hanson, involving private bargaining, do not support Abood’s conclusion that compelled subsidization of public-sector collective bargaining is permissible. This Court has since recognized that the “Abood court seriously erred” in concluding that Street’s and Hanson’s authorization of compelled subsidization of private-sector collective bargaining somehow supported such compulsion in the “very different” public-sector context, in which a “state instrumentality” may directly impose subsidization of collective-bargaining speech that is “directed at the Government” and designed to “influence the decisionmaking process.” Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2632-33 (citation omitted).<sup>12</sup>

These burdens on non-member teachers’ speech rights, countenanced in Abood, should now be rejected by this Court.

b. The mandatory exaction of dissenters’ agency fee money infringes the dissenters’ First Amendment rights.

The “heavy burden” that agency shop arrangements impose on the First Amendment rights of non-member public employees who are compelled to fund bargaining in which unions advocate policies that the non-members teachers may view as detrimental to their own interests is

---

<sup>12</sup> There is no meaningful distinction between a public employee group lobbying for a salary increase, a business lobbying for a tax credit or exemption, or a taxpayer association lobbying for lower taxes. All of these groups seek to influence the government to adopt their policy preference and advance their financial goals. There is no basis for granting one group the power to compel financial support for its position from citizens who oppose those policy goals. A business corporation’s shareholders who dissent from the corporation’s lobbying program can disassociate themselves from the company’s position by voting for a shareholder resolution expressing disfavor, or, at the end of the day, by liquidating their investment in the firm, First Nat’l Bank of Bos. v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 794 n.34 (1978), but that option is not, under current law, available to public employees with respect to “chargeable” union expenditures.

incompatible with this Court's First Amendment jurisprudence. Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2643. The Court has repeatedly underscored the "significant impingement on [the] First Amendment rights" of non-member employees, recognizing that it is equally abhorrent to the First Amendment for the government to "compel the endorsement of ideas" as it is for the government to "prohibit the dissemination of ideas that it disfavors." Knox, 567 U.S. at 309.

While Abood drew a distinction between union fees used for "political" and "ideological" causes, on the one hand, and "collective bargaining activities," on the other, this Court's more recent decisions have exposed the artificiality and unworkability of that division. Indeed, it is no longer open to dispute that a "public-sector union takes many positions during collective bargaining that have powerful political and civic consequences. Knox, 567 U.S. at 310; see also Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2632.

The objections of non-members to the union's collective bargaining activities with respect to the employer-employee matters that have broader public policy implications are often based on personal political and ideological beliefs, as well as purely professional concerns. The free speech and free association concerns that prompted the Abood Court to condemn compelled subsidies for union non-bargaining lobbying activities apply as well to “agency shop” arrangements that compel non-members to fund the union’s collective bargaining activities because those arrangements coerce public employees who choose not to join the union to finance the union’s collective bargaining activities with which they broadly disagree on matters of great public concern.

The dissenting non-members are compelled to fund advocacy of positions different from those the non-members themselves would articulate – sometimes diametrically opposite ones. Harris, 134 S. Ct. at 2623, 2640. This is subsidization of “political” speech that affronts the First Amendment.

CONCLUSION

This Court should grant the petition, overrule Abood, and reverse the decision below.

Respectfully submitted,
MARTIN S. KAUFMAN
Atlantic Legal Foundation
500 Mamaroneck Avenue
Harrison, New York 10528
(914) 834-3322
mskaufman@atlanticlegal.org
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae
Atlantic Legal Foundation

July, 2017