

No. 15-415

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

ENCINO MOTORCARS, LLC,
Petitioner,

v.

HECTOR NAVARRO; ANTHONY PINKINS;
KEVIN MALONE; AND REUBEN CASTRO, Respondents.

On Writ Of Certiorari
To The United States Court Of Appeals For The Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, NATIONAL FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS, AND RETAIL LITIGATION CENTER AS *AMICI
CURIAE* IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

KATE COMERFORD TODD
WARREN D. POSTMAN
U.S. CHAMBER LITIGATION
CENTER, INC.
1615 H Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20062

MATTHEW W. LAMPE
Counsel of Record
JONES DAY
222 East 41st Street
New York, NY 10017
(212) 326-3939
mwlampe@jonesday.com

DEBORAH WHITE
RETAIL LITIGATION CENTER,
INC.
1700 N. Moore Street
Suite 2250
Arlington, VA 22209

E. MICHAEL ROSSMAN
JONES DAY
325 John H. McConnell Blvd.
Suite 600
Columbus, Ohio 43215

Counsel for Amici Curiae

(Additional counsel listed on inside cover)

RYAN J. WATSON
JONES DAY
51 Louisiana Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether “service advisors” at car dealerships are exempt under 29 U.S.C. § 213(b)(10)(A) from the Fair Labor Standards Act’s overtime-pay requirements.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTION PRESENTED.....	i
INTERESTS OF THE AMICI CURIAE	1
INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.....	2
ARGUMENT.....	5
I. THIS COURT SHOULD REJECT THE UNJUSTIFIABLE CANON THAT EXEMPTIONS TO THE FLSA MUST BE NARROWLY CONSTRUED	5
A. The Canon That a Remedial Statute Should Be Liberally Construed to Effectuate Its Purposes Is Flawed	6
B. The Notion That FLSA Exemptions Should Be Narrowly Construed Against Employers Doubles Down on the Flaws Inherent in the Liberal- Construction Canon	10
II. THE VALIDITY OF THE CANON THAT FLSA EXEMPTIONS MUST BE NARROWLY CONSTRUED IS SQUARELY ENCOMPASSED WITHIN THE QUESTION PRESENTED, AND THIS COURT SHOULD ADDRESS IT.....	15
CONCLUSION	18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page(s)
CASES
AH Phillips, Inc. v. Walling , 324 U.S. 490 (1945)	passim
Alexander v. Sandoval , 532 U.S. 275 (2001)	16
Amendola v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. 558 F. Supp. 2d 459 (S.D.N.Y. 2008)	18
Anderson v. Cagle’s, Inc. , 488 F.3d 945 (11th Cir. 2007)	12
Arnold v. Ben Kanowsky, Inc. , 361 U.S. 388 (1960)	16
Barrentine v. Arkansas-Best Freight Sys., Inc. , 450 U.S. 728 (1981)	11
Christopher v. SmithKline Beecham Corp. , 132 S. Ct. 2156 (2012)	17
Lingle v. Chevron USA Inc. , 544 U.S. 528 (2005)	3, 4, 5, 16
Mechmet v. Four Seasons Hotels, Ltd. , 825 F.2d 1173 (7th Cir. 1987)	14
Michigan v. Bay Mills Indian Cmty. , 134 S. Ct. 2024 (2014)	7, 8, 9
Miller v. Team Go Figure , No. 3:13-CV-1509-0, 2014 WL 1909354 (N.D. Tex. May 13, 2014)	18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

(continued)

	Page(s)
Mitchell v. Ky. Finance Co. , 359 U.S. 290 (1959)	16
Navarro v. Encino Motorcars, LLC , 780 F.3d 1267 (9th Cir. 2015)	3, 14, 17, 18
Nicholson v. World Bus. Network, Inc. , 105 F.3d 1361 (11th Cir. 1997)	14
OWCP v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. , 514 U.S. 122 (1995)	6, 7
Rodriguez v. United States , 480 U.S. 522 (1987)	7, 8, 9
Sandifer v. U.S. Steel Corp. , 134 S. Ct. 870 (2014)	17
SEC v. CM Joiner Leasing Corp. , 320 U.S. 344 (1943)	3
Tcherepnin v. Knight , 389 U.S. 332 (1967)	6
Thompson v. J.C. Billion, Inc. , 294 P.3d 397 (Mont. 2013)	18
STATUTES
29 U.S.C. § 206	12
29 U.S.C. § 207	4
29 U.S.C. § 213	passim
Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961, Pub. L. No. 87-30, 75 Stat. 65.....	12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

	Page(s)
Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966, Pub. L. No. 89-601, 80 Stat. 830.....	13
Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-259, 88 Stat. 55.....	13
OTHER AUTHORITIES
Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014).....	9
Richard Posner, Statutory Interpretation—In the Classroom and in the Courtroom , 50 U. Chi. L. Rev. 800 (1983).....	7, 8, 10
Antonin Scalia & Bryan A. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts (2012).....	7, 8, 9
Antonin Scalia, A Matter of Interpretation: Federal Courts and the Law (1997).....	10
Antonin Scalia, Assorted Canards of Contemporary Legal Analysis , 40 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 581 (1990).....	passim
Sup. Ct. R. 14.....	15

INTERESTS OF THE *AMICI CURIAE*¹

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America (“the Chamber”) is the world’s largest federation of businesses and associations. The Chamber represents three hundred thousand direct members and indirectly represents an underlying membership of more than three million U.S. businesses and professional organizations of every size and in every economic sector and geographic region of the country. An important function of the Chamber is to represent the interests of its members in matters before the courts, Congress, and the Executive Branch. To that end, the Chamber regularly files amicus curiae briefs in cases that raise issues of vital concern to the nation’s business community.

The National Federation of Independent Business Small Business Legal Center (“NFIB Legal Center”) is a nonprofit, public interest law firm established to provide legal resources and be the voice for small businesses in the Nation’s courts through representation on issues of public interest affecting small businesses. NFIB is the nation’s leading small business association, representing 325,000 members across the country. To fulfill its role as the voice for small business, the NFIB Legal Center frequently files amicus curiae briefs in cases that will impact small businesses.

¹ Counsel for both Petitioner and Respondents have filed, with the Clerk of this Court, blanket consent to the filing of amicus curiae briefs. As required by Rule 37.6, amici state that no counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part and that no person or entity other than amici, their members, or their counsel made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief.

The Retail Litigation Center, Inc. (“RLC”) is a public policy organization that identifies and engages in legal proceedings that affect the retail industry. The RLC’s members include many of the country’s largest and most innovative retailers. The member entities whose interests the RLC represents employ millions of people throughout the United States, provide goods and services to tens of millions more, and account for tens of billions of dollars in annual sales. The RLC seeks to provide courts with retail-industry perspectives on important legal issues, and to highlight the potential industry-wide consequences of significant pending cases.

Collectively, the foregoing amici represent a wide cross-section of the employer community throughout the United States. American employers dedicate considerable time, energy, and resources to achieving compliance with the myriad statutes governing the workplace, including the Fair Labor Standards Act (“FLSA” or “Act”), while at the same time maintaining and creating much-needed jobs. Amici’s members therefore have a strong interest in fostering statutory interpretation that is fair, predictable, and evenhanded—rather than having courts unjustifiably put a thumb on the scales at the outset of the interpretive process. This case affords the Court an opportunity to advance this sensible approach to interpretation of workplace laws by rejecting the unwarranted canon that FLSA exemptions must be narrowly construed.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

“On occasion, a would-be doctrinal rule or test finds its way into [this Court’s] case law through simple repetition of a phrase—however fortuitously coined.” Lingle v. Chevron USA Inc., 544 U.S. 528, 531 (2005). When it becomes apparent, however, that such “repetition of a phrase” is “doctrinally untenable,” this Court has properly stepped in to “correct course” and hold that the phrase—however familiar it may be—“has no proper place in [its] jurisprudence.” Id. at 531, 544, 548 (emphasis omitted).

This case calls for just such a clarification. From time to time, this Court has stated “that remedial statutes should be liberally construed” to effectuate their remedial purpose. SEC v. CM Joiner Leasing Corp., 320 U.S. 344, 353 (1943). In 1945, this Court went one step further by stating that, because the FLSA was “designed to extend the frontiers of social progress,” purposeful, explicit exemptions to such “humanitarian and remedial legislation” should “be narrowly construed.” AH Phillips, Inc. v. Walling, 324 U.S. 490, 493 (1945) (internal quotation marks omitted). “[T]hrough simple repetition,” Lingle, 544 U.S. at 531, this statement has seeped into the caselaw and produced the canon that FLSA exemptions should be narrowly construed.

While this Court has in practice placed little weight on the notion that FLSA exemptions should be narrowly construed, the Ninth Circuit placed substantial weight on that canon to hold that service advisors at automobile dealerships are not exempt from the FLSA’s overtime-pay provision. See Navarro v. Encino Motorcars, LLC, 780 F.3d 1267, 1271–73 & n.3 (9th Cir. 2015). That reliance was misplaced.

As an initial matter, there is no basis in either law or logic to infer that Congress means more (or less) than it says in a statute, simply because the legislation might be described as “remedial.” See, e.g., Antonin Scalia, Assorted Canards of Contemporary Legal Analysis, 40 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 581, 581–86 (1990). Indeed, the canon that remedial statutes should be liberally construed rests on a fundamental misconception about the legislative process—namely, that Members of Congress draft statutes to pursue a single objective without compromise or moderation. Moreover, the liberal-construction canon is unsupportable because it is “indeterminate, as to both when it applies and what it achieves.” Id. at 586. For these reasons, courts should not assume that Congress intends for so-called “remedial” statutes to extend more broadly than their text, structure, and purpose indicate.

Moreover, the liberal-construction canon’s supposed corollary—that courts should assume Congress is less than sincere when it includes explicit exemptions to a “remedial” statute—is doubly flawed, particularly in the FLSA context. The numerous exemptions to the so-called “remedial” provisions of the Act clearly demonstrate that Congress did not intend the Act to impose limitless burdens on employers. It is especially problematic to assume that the exemption at issue here—which encompasses “any salesman, partsman, or mechanic primarily engaged in selling or servicing automobiles,” 29 U.S.C. § 213(b)(10)(A)—should be construed more narrowly than its plain text would otherwise indicate. Congress amended this exemption repeatedly to calibrate its scope, making perfectly clear that it did not wish the FLSA to be unthinkingly extended in this context.

The Court should make clear that exemptions to the FLSA should be reflexively construed neither narrowly nor broadly but, rather, should be construed correctly. The proper approach to interpreting FLSA exemptions is of course squarely presented in this case, which calls for the Court to interpret § 213(b)(10)(A)'s automobile dealership exemption. Moreover, stare decisis presents no obstacle to disapproving the canon, because amici are unaware of any decision in which the canon represented an essential part of this Court's holding. At the same time, FLSA caselaw suggests that the canon is not simply an ill-advised, yet harmless turn of phrase; rather, lower court opinions indicate that this canon has distorted the process of interpreting the FLSA. Consequently, the Court should make clear that this rule "has no proper place in [its] jurisprudence." Lingle, 544 U.S. at 548.

ARGUMENT

I. THIS COURT SHOULD REJECT THE UNJUSTIFIABLE CANON THAT EXEMPTIONS TO THE FLSA MUST BE NARROWLY CONSTRUED.

The canon that FLSA exemptions should be narrowly construed descends from the following statement of the Court in AH Phillips:

The Fair Labor Standards Act was designed to extend the frontiers of social progress by insuring to all our able-bodied working men and women a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. Any exemption from such humanitarian and remedial legislation must therefore be narrowly construed To extend an exemption to other than those plainly and unmistakably within its terms and spirit is to abuse the interpretative process and to frustrate the announced will of the people.

324 U.S. at 493 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). This hostile view toward exemptions to “remedial” statutes, in turn, is an application of “the familiar canon of statutory construction that remedial legislation should be construed broadly to effectuate its purposes.” Tcherepnin v. Knight, 389 U.S. 332, 336 (1967).

As discussed in detail below, the canon that remedial statutes should be liberally construed is flawed. See infra at § I.A. And this canon’s purported corollary—that courts should narrowly construe exemptions to remedial statutes—only exacerbates the flaws inherent in the liberal-construction canon. See infra at § I.B. Perhaps this is why Respondents offer only a tepid, one-paragraph endorsement of the notion, featured prominently in the decision below, that FLSA exemptions must be narrowly construed. See Br. in Opp’n 22.

A. The Canon That a Remedial Statute Should Be Liberally Construed to Effectuate Its Purposes Is Flawed.

The notion that a remedial statute must be broadly construed to advance its purposes—which an eight-Justice majority aptly labeled the “last redoubt of losing causes,” OWCP v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 514 U.S. 122, 135 (1995)—suffers from three severe flaws.

1. The liberal-construction canon rests on an elemental misunderstanding of the legislative process. Leading jurists and commentators have laid bare the erroneous premise that underlies this canon—namely, that Congress intends statutes to extend as far as possible in service of a single objective. See Antonin Scalia & Bryan A. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 21, 362–63 (2012); Richard Posner, Statutory Interpretation—In the Classroom and in the Courtroom, 50 U. Chi. L. Rev. 800, 808–09 (1983). As Judge Posner succinctly put it, this canon “goes wrong by being unrealistic about legislative objectives.” Statutory Interpretation, supra at 808–09.

In reality, “no legislation pursues its purposes at all costs.” Rodriguez v. United States, 480 U.S. 522, 525–26 (1987) (per curiam); see also OWCP, 514 U.S. at 135–36. Instead, legislators inevitably balance how far a statute should go toward achieving one particular objective against various other objectives that they or their colleagues also value. Michigan v. Bay Mills Indian Cmty., 134 S. Ct. 2024, 2033–34 (2014) (“Congress wrote the statute it wrote”—meaning, a statute going so far and no further.”); Rodriguez, 480 U.S. at 525–26; OWCP, 514 U.S. at 135–36.² Indeed, “[d]eciding what competing values will or will not be sacrificed to the achievement of a particular objective is the very essence of legislative choice.” Rodriguez, 480 U.S. at 525–26; see also OWCP, 514 U.S. at 136 (“Every statute proposes, not only to achieve certain ends, but also to achieve them by particular means—and there is often a considerable legislative battle over what those means ought to be.”). In short, as the Court in Bay Mills recently explained, “[t]his Court has no roving license . . . to disregard clear language simply on the view that . . . Congress ‘must have intended’ something broader.” 134 S. Ct. at 2034.

² This point is uncontroversial. Eight Justices joined the opinion in OWCP, and no Justice expressed disagreement with this point in Rodriguez. See Rodriguez, 480 U.S. at 525–26; OWCP, 514 U.S. at 135–36.

As a result, when courts analyze the balance struck by Congress in a remedial statute, the goal “should be neither liberally to expand nor strictly to constrict its meaning, but rather to get the meaning precisely right.” Assorted Canards, supra at 582; see also id. at 581–86; Reading Law, supra at 21, 362–63. Doing otherwise “would upset the compromise that the [remedial] statute was intended to embody.” Statutory Interpretation, supra at 809; see also Bay Mills, 134 S. Ct. at 2034; Rodriguez, 480 U.S. at 526. To be sure, divining congressional intent “may often be difficult, but [there is] no reason, a priori, to compound the difficulty, and render it even more unlikely that the precise meaning will be discerned, by laying a judicial thumb on one or the other side of the scales” when interpreting a remedial statute. Assorted Canards, supra at 582.

Because the aim of statutory interpretation is to assess congressional intent, the rule of construing remedial statutes broadly reflects an assumption that Congress would have intended for some statutes to prohibit or require more than their text, structure, and purpose would otherwise indicate. But there is no reason to think that Congress is more or less timid in expressing its will through the text and structure of certain statutes, simply because those laws might be “remedial” in some vague, undefined sense. Consequently, the Court has emphasized that “it frustrates rather than effectuates legislative intent simplistically to assume that whatever furthers the statute’s primary objective must be the law.” Rodriguez, 480 U.S. at 526; see also Bay Mills, 134 S. Ct. at 2034.

2. Another ill that infects the liberal-construction canon is that there is virtually no clarity about when the canon should apply. Indeed, “there is not the slightest agreement on what . . . the phrase ‘remedial statutes’” means. Assorted Canards, supra at 583; see also id. at 586. Accordingly, even accepting the liberal-construction canon on its own terms, courts are left to speculate about when the canon should apply.

To be sure, the term “remedial” has been defined as “intended for a remedy or for the removal or abatement of an evil.” Assorted Canards, supra at 583 (quoting Webster’s Third New International Dictionary 1920 (1961)). Similarly, Black’s Law Dictionary defines the phrase “remedial statute” to mean (1) “[a]ny statute other than a private bill; a law providing a means to enforce rights or redress injuries” or (2) “[a] statute enacted to correct one or more defects, mistakes, or omissions.” Id. (10th ed. 2014). These definitions, however, serve only to illustrate how unworkable the liberal-construction canon is: If courts must liberally construe any statute that aims to create a remedy or mitigate an evil, then all statutes are in some sense remedial, “since one can hardly conceive of a law that is not meant to solve some problem.” Assorted Canards, supra at 583; see also Reading Law, supra at 364 (“Is any statute not remedial? Does any statute not seek to remedy an unjust or inconvenient situation?"); Statutory Interpretation, supra at 809. And if the liberal-construction canon applies to all statutes, thus "leaving nothing to be construed straight down the middle," Assorted Canards, supra at 585, then the canon has little or no meaning.

3. Assuming for the sake of argument that one could settle on a useful definition of what statutes are "remedial," the liberal construction canon would still remain hopelessly malleable and manipulable. After all, after one lets go of the conventional tools of statutory interpretation, there is no objective means of determining "[h]ow liberal is liberal." Assorted Canards, supra at 582.

"[I]t is virtually impossible to expect uniformity and objectivity when there is added, on one or the other side of the balance, a thumb of indeterminate weight." Antonin Scalia, A Matter of Interpretation: Federal Courts and the Law 28 (1997). The result is that this canon "can be used, or not used, or half-used, almost ad libitum, depending mostly upon whether its use, or nonuse, or half-use, will assist in reaching the result the court wishes to achieve." Id.; A Matter of Interpretation, supra at 27–28.

B. The Notion That FLSA Exemptions Should Be Narrowly Construed Against Employers Doubles Down on the Flaws Inherent in the Liberal-Construction Canon.

The purported corollary of the liberal-construction rule is that exemptions to the FLSA should be narrowly construed. But this principle, which was spawned in AH Phillips, only doubles down on the flaws inherent in the liberal-construction canon.

Even assuming that “remedial” statutes should be broadly construed, there is simply no basis to conclude that Congress intends remedial statutes to be extended in the face of an express exemption. In such instances, by definition, Congress has explicitly stated that it does not wish the statute to be extended broadly. And there is no reason to believe, in the abstract, that Congress in these situations does not mean what it says, or that it feels more strongly about the statute’s prohibitions than its exemptions.

Indeed, one could just as easily say that exemptions to remedial statutes are themselves “remedial,” as they are intended to remedy the otherwise excessive scope of more general provisions. Accordingly, if one took seriously the rule of broadly construing “remedial” provisions, there is at least as strong an argument that statutory exemptions should be read broadly. Of course, such complexity and confusion can be avoided simply by interpreting the exemptions through the standard tools of statutory construction, without handicapping one outcome over another.

Placing a thumb on the interpretive scale is particularly inappropriate in the context of the FLSA for two reasons, each of which is explored below.

1. Congress included so many exemptions to the so-called “remedial” provisions of the FLSA that it is particularly implausible to assume Congress had no concern for the FLSA’s breadth. Like any statute, the FLSA embodies a balance of legislative priorities. On the one hand, the Act protects the “health, efficiency, and general well-being of workers,” Barrentine v. Arkansas-Best Freight Sys., Inc., 450

U.S. 728, 739 (1981) (quoting 29 U.S.C. § 202(a)), by requiring employers to provide certain employees with benefits such as overtime pay, 29 U.S.C. §§ 206, 207. On the other hand, the Act includes numerous exemptions recognizing that FLSA protections are unnecessary and even ill-advised where employers and employees alike would benefit from alternative compensation practices. See 29 U.S.C. § 213(a).

Specifically, Congress excluded from the FLSA's general protections over 50 categories of employees ranging from white collar workers, to fishermen and seamen, to employees of movie theaters or the maple syrup industry. It is, therefore, implausible to suggest that Congress was shy about carving out exemptions or that it intended to disfavor employers at every turn. In fact, as discussed below, Congress amended the FLSA precisely "to curtail employee-protective interpretations of the FLSA." Anderson v. Cagle's, Inc., 488 F.3d 945, 958 (11th Cir. 2007). Consequently, construing the FLSA based on the assumption that Congress uniformly intended to disfavor employers "contravenes . . . the readily apparent intent" of Congress. Id.

The FLSA's automobile dealership exemption provides a perfect example. In 1961, Congress exempted all employees of automobile dealerships from the FLSA's overtime pay provision. Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961, Pub. L. No. 87-30, § 9, 75 Stat. 65, 73 (codified at 29 U.S.C. § 213(a)(19) (1964)) (exempting "any employee of a retail or service establishment which is primarily engaged in the business of selling automobiles"); see also Br. in Opp'n 1-3. Five years later, however, Congress amended the automobile dealership exemption so that it would apply only to a specific subset of dealership employees: “any salesman, partsman, or mechanic primarily engaged in selling or servicing automobiles” Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966, Pub. L. No. 89-601, § 209, 80 Stat. 830, 836. Congress again amended the exemption in 1974, but not in ways that are directly relevant here. See Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-259, § 14, 88 Stat. 55, 65. Through this process of legislative tinkering, Congress carefully calibrated—and recalibrated—the scope of the automobile dealership exemption. In such a scenario, it is fanciful to think that loading the dice in favor of a particular interpretation—by narrowly construing the exemption against employers—is the best way to honor Congress’s intent. Rather, courts should deploy the ordinary tools of statutory construction to determine the exemption’s intended meaning.

2. The argument that FLSA exemptions should be narrowly construed is animated by a desire to protect employees’ wage and hour rights. See AH Phillips, 324 U.S. at 493. But this argument is misguided because, in many cases, the FLSA exemptions serve the interests of employees as well as employers. That the Act’s exemptions do not inherently trench on employees’ rights confirms that the exemptions should be interpreted fairly, not in an unduly narrow manner.

Congress believed that the best way to ensure “a fair day’s pay” was to require overtime in some circumstances. Id. That said, Congress likewise believed (as demonstrated by the inclusion of explicit exemptions), that alternative compensation arrangements could provide better and fairer pay in other circumstances. See Nicholson v. World Bus. Network, Inc., 105 F.3d 1361, 1363 (11th Cir. 1997) (“The chief financial officer of a company, for instance, would be less likely to [need statutorily required overtime pay] than a janitor or assembly linesman.”). Courts should draw the line between these two sets of circumstances by interpreting the text and purpose of the statutory exemption, not by “laying a judicial thumb on one or the other side of the scales.” Assorted Canards, supra at 582.

Again this case is illustrative. Service advisors are well compensated: They earn an average of more than $65,000 per year, with the top 10% earning an average in excess of $99,000 per year. Br. of Amici Curiae Nat’l Auto. Dealers Ass’n et al. 6–7 (filed Nov. 4, 2015); see also id. at 7 (noting that service advisors in the Pacific region earn considerably more). And Respondents are compensated solely via commissions. See Navarro, 780 F.3d at 1270. Thus, to the extent they worked long hours, they did so not “out of desperation,” Mechmet v. Four Seasons Hotels, Ltd., 825 F.2d 1173, 1176 (7th Cir. 1987), but instead based on an incentive to increase their compensation. “They are, after all, already highly compensated, so it is unlikely that a victory in this lawsuit will improve their net position, and it might worsen it.” Id. at 1179.

In short, forced overtime would saddle automobile dealerships and service advisors with a compensation model in which service advisors would be limited in the hours they could work and unable to earn extra pay for better performance. Accordingly, while Respondents themselves would obtain a windfall if they were to prevail in this suit, their narrow construction of the FLSA's automobile dealership exemption would undermine rather than promote the interests of service advisors going forward. There is no basis to assume a priori that Congress would wish this result, simply because the FLSA might be deemed, in some vague sense, "remedial."

II. THE VALIDITY OF THE CANON THAT FLSA EXEMPTIONS MUST BE NARROWLY CONSTRUED IS SQUARELY ENCOMPASSED WITHIN THE QUESTION PRESENTED, AND THIS COURT SHOULD ADDRESS IT.

The Court might be capable of resolving this case without addressing the validity of the canon that FLSA exemptions must be narrowly construed. That said, the question whether the canon has any legitimacy is squarely presented here, and prudential considerations counsel strongly in favor of addressing this question.

As a threshold matter, addressing the canon's validity would be proper under this Court's Rules. Rule 14(1)(a) dictates that the question presented "is deemed to comprise every subsidiary question fairly included therein." Id. Here, the question presented is whether the FLSA's automobile dealership exemption applies to service advisors. And determining the proper standard to be used when interpreting that exemption is an issue that is antecedent to—and "fairly included" within—the question presented. See id.; see also Pet. 32–33 (discussing the canon in the context of addressing whether service advisors fall within the automobile dealership exemption).

Moreover, although this Court has previously endorsed the canon that FLSA exemptions should be narrowly construed, e.g., AH Phillips, Inc., 324 U.S. at 493, stare decisis presents no obstacle to rejecting it now. “[T]his Court is bound by holdings, not language.” Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275, 282 (2001); see Lingle, 544 U.S. at 545–46 (“We emphasize that our holding today—that the ‘substantially advances’ formula is not a valid takings test—does not require us to disturb any of our prior holdings. To be sure, we applied [this] inquiry in Agins itself But in no case have we found a compensable taking based on such an inquiry.”). Amici are not aware of any decision in which this canon was an essential part of the Court’s holding. For example, the Court recited the canon in Mitchell v. Ky. Finance Co., 359 U.S. 290 (1959), but it did so only in one line in the last paragraph of the opinion. Id. at 295. The Court described its holding in Mitchell as supported by “abundant pointed evidence”—including “detailed and explicit” legislative history (at a time when the Court placed great weight on such authority), id. at 293, 296, and so any interpretive presumption was irrelevant. The Court in Arnold v. Ben Kanowsky, Inc., 361 U.S. 388 (1960), likewise recited the canon in passing, but it did not need to rely on the canon because it found the answer to the interpretive question to be “clear.” Id. at 393 (“It is clear that respondent does not meet at least two of the three standards”); id. at 391 (“clear legislative history”); id. at 394 (“clearly”); id. at 392.

What is more, in recent years, this Court has twice declined to apply the canon that FLSA exemptions must be narrowly construed. In Christopher v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 132 S. Ct. 2156 (2012), the Court concluded that FLSA’s “outside salesman” exemption did “not furnish a clear answer” to the question at issue, but the Court nonetheless declined to apply the canon. Id. at 2170, 2172 n.21 (reasoning that the canon “is inapposite where . . . [the Court is] interpreting a general definition that applies throughout the FLSA”). In Sandifer v. U.S. Steel Corp., 134 S. Ct. 870 (2014), the Court again chose not to apply the canon. Id. at 879 n.7. Indeed, eight Justices joined an opinion that went out of its way to avoid reliance on the canon. See id. (“The Court has stated that ‘exemptions’ in the Fair Labor Standards Act ‘are to be narrowly construed against the employers seeking to assert them.’ We need not disapprove that statement to resolve the present case.”) (emphasis added).

Finally, although this Court is not bound by its dicta regarding the narrow construction of FLSA exemptions, lower courts often perceive themselves to be. This perception creates a risk that lower courts will pull up short of the careful analysis needed to decide close cases, defaulting instead to the canon in order to construe an exemption narrowly. For instance, in the decision below, the Ninth Circuit repeatedly invoked the canon that FLSA exemptions should be narrowly construed.³ Yet the Supreme Court of Montana reached the opposite conclusion when not relying on the canon. See Thompson v. J.C. Billion, Inc., 294 P.3d 397, 401 (Mont. 2013) (failing to apply the canon, although noting that the lower court did so, and holding that service advisors fall within the FLSA’s automobile dealership exemption). Indeed, at least one other court has suggested expressly that the canon was the dispositive factor in its analysis. Amendola v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. 558 F. Supp. 2d 459, 472 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (distinguishing decisions in factually identical cases because the courts did “not acknowledge that the FLSA’s exemptions must be narrowly construed against employers”); see Miller v. Team Go Figure, No. 3:13-CV-1509-0, 2014 WL 1909354, at *7 (N.D. Tex. May 13, 2014) (relying heavily on the canon).

³ Navarro, 780 F.3d at 1271 (“we must apply the background rule that ‘the FLSA is to be construed liberally in favor of employees; exemptions are narrowly construed against employers’”); id. (“FLSA exemptions are to be withheld except as to persons plainly and unmistakably within their terms and spirit.”); id. at 1271 n.3 (discussing “[t]he rule that courts should construe the FLSA’s exemptions narrowly”); id. at 1272 (“Nor do canons of statutory interpretation aid Defendant. To the contrary, the § 213 ‘exemptions are narrowly construed against

This Court should take the opportunity presented in this case to reject the notion that exemptions to remedial statutes must be narrowly construed, at least as applied to the FLSA.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and those stated by Petitioner, the Ninth Circuit’s decision should be reversed.

(continued...)

employers.”); id. at 1273 (concluding that the Department of Labor’s “interpretation accords with the presumption that the § 213 exemptions should be construed narrowly”).

Respectfully submitted,

KATE COMERFORD TODD
WARREN D. POSTMAN
U.S. CHAMBER LITIGATION
CENTER, INC.
1615 H Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20062

DEBORAH WHITE
RETAIL LITIGATION CENTER,
INC.
1700 N. Moore Street
Suite 2250
Arlington, VA 22209

March 7, 2016

MATTHEW W. LAMPE
Counsel of Record
JONES DAY
222 East 41st Street
New York, NY 10017
(212) 326-3939
mwlampe@jonesday.com

E. MICHAEL ROSSMAN
JONES DAY
325 John H. McConnell Blvd.
Suite 600
Columbus, Ohio 43215

RYAN J. WATSON
JONES DAY
51 Louisiana Avenue N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

Counsel for Amici Curiae